ASHLAND COLLEGE says: Senator Sherman created sensation to-day by leaving the chair and taking the floor while the silver debate was in progress, to open the attack upon the Administration because of its inconsistency in removing Republicans for po-litical reasons, while the President has repeatedly said he would not do so and is not doing so. Edmunds was asked to lead off on this question. He has the matter in charge by common consent, and it is well known that he has spent a great terest as the chief political document of this session of Congress. It was supposed that he would present this report to the Senate to-day. There was a full attendance of Senators and spectators in the galleries to hear it, but Edmunds did not appear. He sent a note to Ingails saying that he was suffering from a very sore throat and asking him to preside at the Judiciary Committee meeting This com-mittee has not yet adopted Edmunds' report, but it was supposed that he would call a special meeting to consider it as soon as he was well enough to attend.

Until then it was understood that the discussion of the President's refusal to furnish the information upon re-novals would be postponed. There is a good deal of rivalry among To old friends and patrons, and the public generally, he would announce that he is prepared to do all work in his line in good style using the best material. A later special says: Edmunds' report upon the communication of the Attorney-General declining to furnish papapers referring to removals is practically completed. Edmunds draws almost exclusively upon Democratic authority for his precedents to sustain the position which the Republican Senators have taken. He will show that on February 9th. 1835, John C. Calhoun reported a bill requiring the President, at the beginning of every session of Congress, to report to the Senate all removals from office in the Congressional recess, and to assign the reasons for which such removals were made. This report, with a few changes made in names and dates, would apply directly to the controversy now pending. In his report Edmunds will also quote copious extracts from the re-Benton and signed by such men as Martin Van Buren and Hayne of South Carolina, who are supposed to be canonized by the Democratic party.
