For the past two years there has been noticed on the maple trees in front of the Honck corner in town a red scale, which growers here, who thought it might be this valley. No one here, however, was able to decide exactly whether or not it is the dreaded scale bug that has proven so great a pest in California. This week the Tidings sent a twig containing the scales to Mr. W. P. Hammon, of the nurseries at Wagner creek, and he reports that it is one variety of red scale bug, but that it need cause the orchardmen here no alarm whatever, as it confines its ravages almost exclusively to a few kinds of trees not cultivated in orchards here, viz.: or two others, but cannot thrive on either apple, pear, peach, plum or prune trees. Further than this, it would seem that this climate is not favorable to its life even on one of its favorite trees, the maple, for the trees which were covered with it last summer have but little on them this year, and do not appear to have been materially injured by its presence.
