Collin Moth Preventive.

Editors News: In your daily issue of Oct. 29th there is an article on the ravages of the collin moth among the apple trees in Oregon, in which it is stated that "there is no known remedy to exterminate the collin moth..."

Remedy for Cough.

The following is the remedy: Hang a lighted lantern to the limb of the tree, set an apple box on the ground, and place a pan full of water on top of the box and a spoon full of coal oil on the water. The lantern should be kept burning near enough the water to clear it. Some have said that the collin moth is not attracted by light, but I think all the moth family are alike in their liking for a light. The first night I caught over 200 moths with one light. The next night 70. Then I wanted two nights and the next time I caught over 200. I believe that two lanterns in a ten-acre orchard, lighted two nights in the week, would clear the orchard pretty clear of collin moths. Every moth that touches the oil on the water is caught, and not more than a part of oil is needed during the entire season. The work should be kept up during the whole season.

So much, indeed, that the farmers there are getting discouraged and will be obliged to quit trying to raise any grain, if something is not done to destroy this pest.
