Col. Irish will make personal friends throughout the state among members of both parties, and if his speeches are all cast in the same moderate and conciliatory mould as that delivered here, he will leave as pleasant an impression among Republicans as any man in the state has made.

The burden of his speech was the surplus revenue, and upon this he made the changes of his ingenuity and ingenuity of high school taxation.

Col. Irish is an able and eloquent speaker, and even he is unequalled in the tariff statistics read like a tale of Hawthorne, or we have a free trade argument.

Col. Irish is an able and eloquent speaker, and even he is unequalled in the tariff statistics read like a tale of Hawthorne, or we have a free trade argument.

Col. Irish's stamping the state as a whole, no Republican can have reason to make objection, but when, as seems to be well understood and generally admitted, he came to the state of Oregon as the special agent of the President or the administration, to supervise the proceedings of the Democratic state convention, and see that the Democratic state platform should be so constructed as to suit the special ends and personal interests of the General Butcherworth, of Ohio, says: "I have passed one bill, and a close scratch for it." Governor Dingle, of Maine, says: "I have passed none, outside of a few pension cases."

General Cutcheon, of Michigan, says: "I have passed one public bill and four private bills." Mr. Lamban, of Texas, says: "I have passed two private bills."

Col. J. B. Reed, republican leader of Maine, says: "I have passed three private bills." Mr. Mills, (democratic leader of Texas, says: "I have passed one public and one private bill."

Senator Ingalls is of Puritan ancestry. It is told of him that at one of the state dinners some time ago he found himself beside Mrs. Endicott, wife of the secretary of war. The Endicotts are very proud of their lineage.

A farmer near Flint, Mich., is mourning the death of two geese that he had kept for 24 years. They quit raising geese 25 years ago, and after that he kept them to help take care of the broods of other geese.
