"No preacher can touch the heart of this age who believes that the last word in theology was spoken 300 years ago," remarked a clergyman to me the other day. "For the man who would persuade his fellow men must deal will the living issues and living thought, and not with a cut and dried system, however perfect it may be. He must throw some of his vivid personality into the doctrine he preaches, if he would make these doctrines vital facts to his hearers. A preacher can't ladle out a truth as he would soup to the people, and expect that they will accept it. He must so color it with his own thought, and quicken it with his own personal experience that it will come to them as a tremendous living fact of to-day. The too der and executed it quickly.
