A large number of Indians from Klamath reservation, forty or fifty, came in to the valley by the Rogue river road last week, after flour and other supplies. They had intended to across the track just below Siskiyon river road last week, after flour and other supplies. They had intended to come to Ashland, but learned that the mills here were out of flour, and so took the other road. Now that the after has come, the Ashland mills will grind up to their full capacity, twenty-four hours in every day—and there will be no scarcity of flour again this year.
