Scientific Miscellany.

In his late address to the British Association for the Advancement of Science, Capt. W. de Abney answered an oft-repeated question by stating that photography in natural colors not only has been discovered, but pictures in natural colors have been produced. Roughly speaking, the method of producing the spectrum in its natural colors, is to chlorine a silver plate, expose it to white light till it assumes a violet color, heat till it becomes rather ruddy, and expose it to a bright spectrum. The spectrum colors are then impressed in their natural tints. Experiment has shown that these colors are due to an oxidized product being formed at the red end of the spectrum and a reduced product at the violet end. Photography in natural colors, however, is only interesting from a scientific point of view, and is not likely to become artistically satisfactory, or of commercial value.

In the laboratory of the German Imperial Health Department, Dr. L. Heim has found that cholera bacilli may survive in milk from two or three to six days; in sweet butter for a month; but in cheese curds, scarcely a day. The bacilli of typhoid fever were still visible in milk after thirty-five days; in butter they live three weeks; and in whey and natural cheese only three days. Milk containing the bacilli of consumption was still capable of conveying infection after ten days; butter, for four weeks; and whey and cheese, for two weeks.

There are now seven agricultural laboratories in Belgium were gratuitous analysis of manures and feeding stuffs are made. In addition, information is freely furnished to farmers upon the best method of using the manure and feeding stuffs, and upon other questions in agricultural science.

A bag of peas infested with weevils was lately noticed to be surprisingly warm, when investigation showed a temperature outside of 71 degrees and inside of 96 degrees. The difference proved to be due to heat developed through the work of the weevils.

He Helped the Boys.

New York Star.

Russell Sage was the speaker. I had called on him at his Fifth-avenue residence at a little before midnight, seeking an interview on a matter about which it was soon apparent the old gentleman did not want to talk. He was just preparing for bed when I called, and came down stairs in his shirt sleeves. He received me cordially, but somehow I could not bring him to the point. He would insist upon talking of something foreign to what I sought. Finally he said: "Let me tell you about a deal I happened to be into once in New York and New England. It happened in this way: The stock was very low at the time. A pool was formed to boost it. The fellows in the pool, somehow or other, wanted me to be with them. They came and asked me to take 10,000 shares. I didn't care much about it, but the boys said I couldn't lose anything, and it would help them out with the pool; so to help the boys I consented.

"Well, that stock kept going up and going up. I didn't pay much attention to it. I was only in it to help the boys out, you know. Finally, one day I looked at the tape and that blamed stock had advanced thirty points. 'Charlie,' said I, calling one of my boys, 'go over to my broker and tell him to sell my New England, every share of it. This thing's getting to be too much like gambling for me.'

"How did the other fellows come out?" I asked.

"Well, you know, I don't believe in gambling, and that is the reason I sold out. The other boys staid in too long, and lost, I believe; but then, they were gambling."

Daniel Webster's Blue Suit.

Daniel Webster went to college in a homespun suit, of which probably every thread was carded, spun, and woven by his mother's hand from the wool of their own sheep. It was a dyed-in-the-wool suit and the color was indigo blue, the old New England color. In the South it is butternut, but through our Yankee grandmothers and great-great-great grandmothers knew all about what butternut bark would do, and the subtle power for slate color that lay in sumach berries and bark of white maple, and various dyes that root and flower, bark and leaf could be made to yield, through the agency of vitriol and copperas to "set" them fast, the universal stand-by was the blue pot—par excellence the "dye-pot"—that stood in the chimney corner of every kitchen worth naming. So Webster was fitted out in indigo blue from collar to ankle—unbecoming for his swart skin—and set off-hand sophomoric. Before reaching Hanover there came one of those drenching rains which, like the Scottish mists, wets a man to the skin. The suit held its own (for has not indigo blue been "warranted fast" since grst indigo was heard of?) but it had parted with enough so that Daniel, too was dyed blue from head to foot. Daniel Webster had a liberal stratum of sentiment in his make-up, and for some reason this color of his young manhood became his favorite wear through life. He wore blue coats to his dying day. If anyone ever saw him in a different one the fact has not been put on record.—[Wide Awake.

The Hand-Chopping Mania.

For one reason or another, inscrutable to the public at large, the mania of self-amputation rages, with dangerously increasing rapidity, among the convicts in Oregon's state penitentiary. Already three men were confined in dismal dungeons nursing the stumps of left arms, whose hands they had hacked off, presumably to avoid the labors imposed, when the number is suddenly increased to five. The last self-imposed surgeons to attempt the performance of this operation were prisoners named Cummings and Burke, both from Portland, the one on a two year sentence for larceny and the other three. Each served over half his sentence and seemed to be getting on well. Burke, with a hatchet in his right hand, took off the end of his middle finger, and Cummings gave the second and third fingers blows sufficient to carry the blade well into the bone, thus making amputation necessary. Although these fellows butchered themselves, and although the penitentiary officials were interrogated daily by the Statesman, nothing was said of the occurrence until last Friday morning, and only then with the expressing of a desire, accompanied by no reason for suppression, that the fact be not mentioned. An awful example will be continued to be made of these one armed lunatics, there now being five of them reflecting, with heavy iron shackles on their legs, in dungeons in which no light can enter. Provided the dungeons hold out the succeeding imitators of Howard, who set the pattern, will be given like treatment.

NOTES AND NEWS.

Legacies to the amount of $9,000 left by Benjamin Franklin and John Scott, to be expended on public improvements, have amounted by investment for nearly a century to about $110,000. Of this $100,000 will be devoted to the erection of a large public bath in Philadelphia, while the remaining $10,000 will be laid aside for another hundred years.

The citizens of Taylorsville, Neb., recently tarred and feathered old Jason Mitchell and then rode him on a rail. Instead of resenting this treatment, Jason seemed to enjoy it. This puzzled the boys very much until the old man sued twenty-five of them for $100 damages each and got it. Then they began to see that Jason really had the most fun.

A Fresno man proposes to make a change in the manner of grading streets by building them high at the curbs and running one gutter down the center. This, he says, is cheaper, as one gutter is done away with, and water and filth is not run to the walks to be stamped about by standing horses. This scheme looks all right. Ancient methods are not the best always and two gutters may, upon investigation and trial, prove as unnecessary as buttons on the back of a coat.—[Tulare Register.

Among the many curious products of Arizona territory is the small gray Chilla seed. The Indians gather it wild in quantity, and with other edible seeds, vend it from house to house. When used, a small quantity of the seed is dropped into a goblet of clear water, when they immediately burst open with a curious effect, forming a thick fluid. This mixture is a pleasant cooling drink for hot weather, having a mild laxative effect. When moistened it is even more slippery than flaxseed.

The bullet which Morales, the bandit, fired into the head of Bunch, his partner, when they quarreled in Los Angeles county last summer, could not be found by the doctors. Morales was taken back to the Los Angeles county jail last Wednesday to testify against Bunch for horse stealing. When Bunch saw Morales he was noticed to turn deathly pale and put his hand to his mouth. The moment he set eyes on Morales the bullet had dropped into his mouth, and the coincidence nearly frightened Bunch to death.

One thing that the revenue cutter Rush has brought to light is that there has been carried on in Behring Sea an enormous amount of very destructive, exterminating hunting among the seals and sea otters by both the English and American sailors and hunters. Not a poaching schooner has been seized that did not have on board hundreds of skins of seals and otters that had been illegally and wantonly destroyed. Add this illicit taking to the 200,000 skins that the Alaska company is authorized to take, and it will be no difficult task to calculate with reasonably accuracy the day and hour when the seals and the otters will disappear from our waters entirely. The attitude of the United States in this matter is, therefore, in the interest of the perpetuation of the seal and the otter, while the position of the English and the Anglo-Americans of the New York Post and New York Times stripe is favorable to the total destruction of the fisheries.

In an article under the caption of "Sending Lumber Overland," the Alta California has the following in regard to recent eastern shipments: But while we have been for a long time sending considerable quantities of lumber east by water, it was not expected that we should ever be able to ship this comparatively cheap and bulky article to markets in the far interior, and even to points beyond the Rocky mountains, by rail. And yet this is what is now being done. In the month of August last there were sent over the various railroads 152 carloads of lumber, 161 carloads of shingles and 9 carloads of lath to points east of the Cordillera, and all within what might be considered the province of the Michigan and Wisconsin lumber kings. And these August shipments have since increased at a rate that denotes for them a steady growth hereafter. If that sparsely settled region can take from us now so much of those commodities, it is only reasonable to suppose that the quantities they require in the future will be in ratio of their increased population, which will mean a great deal.

The story is told of "Slim Jim" that when he received the news from Sitka that Collector Pracht was closing out all the saloons there, and would be over to Juneau on the next boat for the same purpose, he became disgusted with life, and resolved to take such infallible measures as would leave his heirs to fee the lawyers and live in a country where no whiskey was sold. To that end he started for the beach, provided with a ladder, a rope, a loaded pistol, a bottle of poison, a can of kerosene and a box of matches. Selecting one of the piles standing in the water out in front of Goldstein's, he fixed his ladder against it, and ascending fastened one end of the cord to the top, and passed a slip-knot around his neck, swallowed the poison, poured the kerosene over him and striking a light, set fire to his clothes, then placing the pistol to his ear, kicked away the ladder; but in doing so his hand swerved, and as he fired at the same moment, the bullet, instead of penetrating his brain, divided the rope, and he fell into the sea, extinguishing his burning garments, while the quantity of salt water he swallowed caused him to throw up the poison he had taken, so he scrambled on shore, convinced that his time had not yet arrived. "Slim" still takes his straight, and yells, "here she comes."—Juneau Free Press.

The Lincoln History.

The Lincoln history now appearing in the Century Magazine costs Mr. Roswell Smith, the proprietor of that periodical, $50,000. The way in which he came to pay this extraordinary price is thus described. Mr. Smith found the "War Series" approaching an end, and naturally wanted something to take its place. In his anxiety he declared that he would give $50,000 for a substitute or successor to the articles which had been so prominent. At this juncture Col. John Hay chanced to present himself at the Century office with his manuscript. Mr. Gilder, the principal editor, read a few chapters, and was convinced they would take. A council of war was held of editors and publisher, and on the strength of Mr. Gilder's judgment it was decided to accept the history. Mr. Smith thought he had secured a prize of which he was in search—the material that was to take the place of the great "War Series." Hay meanwhile had gone back to Washington, and Gilder now wrote for Nicolay and him to return. They came and to their amazement and delight were offered $50,000 for the manuscript, for which they would doubtless have been glad to receive a much smaller sum.
