The old time Democratic majority in Jackson county has been steadily cut down from year to year by the immigration and by other influences during the last five or six years, and the politicians of that party are apprehensive that the coming election will show a heavier loss for the last two years than has before occurred in the same perjod. The Times is whistling a cheerful tune to keep up the courage of the Democratic office seekers, but it sounds a deal like forced gaiety and a very thin crust of confidence upon a tremulous quicksand of apprehension.
