the prisoners had been trying to burn out, as they had undertaken to do a few days before; but many things seemed to make this theory impossible, and the mystery was never cleared. The law of the state does not require the sheriff or any jailor to sleep in the jail, but it had been the custom of Sheriff Birdsey to require a deputy to sleep in the front room of the building whenever there were prisoners in custody. Upon the evening before the tite the sheriff and his deputy were to gether, and it was understood that the deputy was to sleep in the jail, but was understood that the deputy was to sleep in the jail that night, as usual. After the ordinary bedtime, the deputy, Wm. Deniff, was informed that the mountain fires were informed informed that the mountain fires were informed informed that the mountain fires were informed in a day in the prisoners in custom of the party so independent of the manifer of the manifers and the manifer deputy was to sleep in the jail that night, as usual. After the ordinary bedtime, the deputy, Wm. Deniff, was informed that the mountain fires were injuring property at his mines several miles from town, and he started off hurriedly to protect it. The deputy and sheriff each had keys to the jail, sworm and subscribed to before me this started of hurriedly to protect it. The deputy sometimes of the Union party support.

In some of the papers of the state the name of Sylvester Pennoyer is printed at the head of the Union ticket as candidate for governor, while in other papers the place is left blank.

In the deputy started off he went to the night watchman of the town and as unberribed to before me, this but as the deputy started off he went to the night watchman of the town and asked him to inform the sheriff that he (the deputy) had gone to his mine. The night watchman failed to find the sheriff, and Sheriff Birdsey never knew till after the alarm of fire in the moorning to the papers the place is left blank.
