ORATION.

Delivered in Ashland on Independence Day, 1890.

Full Text of the Oration Delivered in Ashland at the Celebration, July 4, 1890, by Prof. A. G. Getz, Principal of the Ashland Public Schools.

After the well-rendered reading of the Declaration of Independence by Miss Powers, Prof. Getz was introduced, and spoke as follows:

Would that the new had fewer frontiers, that the stream at our side would change its merry, rippling laugh to an unending murmur, that the hand had been raised to write with the vigor of that which penned those immortal words to which we are now listening.

bellum at home, or oppression from without than the enemies of our peace and property could number. American patriotism is a peculiar nature; let the occasion arise and the seemingly dead soldiers will, from ocean to ocean, be at once fanned into a glowing white heat; but let disorder be suppressed, and their energy will become latent to such an extent that these who are best lookers-on are easily deceived. Is there a people who believe that there is a citizen in this country, however humble he may be, however lowly the station in life which he may occupy, that will not resent every wrong done to his country? Do they believe that the spirit which actuated the founders of the republic would permit them to stand by and witness a wrong done to their country?
