Reviving a Conundrum Which Was Settled by a Famous Mathematician—A Problem of Arithmetic.

There are certain problems, chiefly mathematical, which have been solved in the past, but which have since been forgotten. One of these is a problem which was solved by a famous mathematician, and which has since been forgotten. It is a problem of arithmetic, and is one which has been solved in the past, but which has since been forgotten.

The problem is as follows: A man has a certain number of apples, and he wants to divide them among his children. He has three children, and he wants to give each child an equal share. He has a certain number of apples, and he wants to give each child an equal share. He has a certain number of apples, and he wants to give each child an equal share.

The solution to this problem is as follows: The man has 13 apples, and he wants to give each child an equal share. He has three children, and he wants to give each child an equal share. He has a certain number of apples, and he wants to give each child an equal share.
