Switching Over the Cascades. The switchback, by means of which the Great Northern railway crosses the Cascade mountains in Washington, is a wonderful piece of engineering. When Jim Hill, the president of the Great Northern, decided to push his road from Spokane to Puget sound, he had comparatively a fair field at all points save one. At that point he was confronted by a se ass of granite which blocked his or about three miles. It was dethe excavation would be nearly three miles in length and take three years to complete it was decided to build a temporary road over the mountain in order to open through connection with the coast as soon as possible. The temporary road crosses the crest of the range through Stevens pass at an elevation of 4,068 feet, and the different altitudes are reached by a system of nine switchbacks. The road at one place its former line, only a little higher up the mountain side, but it thus covers a distance of four miles in curves. starts from Tunnel City on the east side of the mountain and runs to Stevens City on the west side. Both of these are 25 miles apart, yet to reach them not a ghost of shadow from the sail. over the switchback a distance of 15 miles must be traversed.
