Prior as a Diplomat.

Prior had several qualifications for diplomatic work. Though he must sometimes have been hampered by his humble origin, he never failed to maintain the dignity of his official position. His special knowledge of commerce, his readiness, his humor, his fluency in French, his familiarity with Horace (a useful accomplishment in the Augustan age) and even "ce visage de bois," as Bolingbroke called it, must often have been of service to him. But Prior's life when he had the honor of representing Queen Anne at the French court was not happy. His letters during that period show that he was uneasy about the prospects of his party and felt his own position to be insecure.

In those days, moreover, the British government was not a good paymaster; generals had sometimes to find money from their own pockets to pay their soldiers, and embassadors' salaries were often in arrear. When the crash came Prior found himself in an unfortunate plight. He was looked coldly on both by the new administration and by his own party. It was stated that he had made revelations, and it was even supposed that his indiscretion was the cause of Bolingbroke's ill judged flight. For this malicious report there is, so far as we know, no trustworthy foundation.—London Athenæum.

One Form of City Charity.

A grocer complains bitterly because wealthy patrons of his establishment send tramps and paupers there with notes saying, "Mr. B——, give this man a pound of crackers and a box of sardines," or "the bearer would like four bundles of kindling and a pound of coffee." The applicants get the stuff because the grocer wants to retain the custom of those who send them and who have not the slightest intention of paying for goods thus given away. "It's pretty cheap charity for these rich people to engage in," says he, "but my experience is that it hurts a rich man worse to give up a dollar than it does a poor man."—New York Sun.

"GRIMES" DAVIS' RIDE

A BOLD NIGHT MARCH THROUGH THE ENEMY'S LINES.

How the Union Cavalry Escaped From Stonewall Jackson's Clutches at Harper's Ferry—A Deed Worthy of Forrest—The Story of a Participant.

[Copyright, 1893, by American Press Association. Book rights reserved.]

IT IS not only disheartening but most distressing to soldiers to find themselves surrounded by an active enemy, all hope of fighting gone and no alternative but to surrender as prisoners of war. Most men prefer fighting to surrendering if there is a shadow of a chance to get out, but the decision is seldom left to the voice of the very ones who will suffer most if it comes to a forlorn battle. Stonewall Jackson surrounded the Union post at Harper's Ferry on Sept. 13, 1862. He had 20,000 men. The garrison of Harper's Ferry numbered over 13,000. The position is low ground on a neck of land formed by junction of the Shenandoah and Potomac rivers and is surrounded at close range by a series of heights from 600 to 1,000 feet above the water. Jackson planted his cannon on the heights ready to bombard the works, but delayed opening fire for some time.

The officers of the garrison, as is usual in such cases, were divided as to what ought to be done to save the post, or at least the men and their arms. The commandant, Colonel Dixon S. Miles, urged that fighting would be a waste of life and that he had no authority to abandon the place, having been ordered to hold it. One of those who dissented from this view was Lieutenant Colonel H. P. Davis, leader of the Eighth New York cavalry, a regiment forming part of the cavalry force of 1,300 horse included in the garrison. Late on the 14th Colonel Davis, known in the service as "Grimes" Davis, with Colonel Hasbrouck Davis of the Twelfth Illinois cavalry, devised a scheme to save their commands. "Grimes" Davis was a native of Alabama and may have had a personal incentive in not wishing to be taken prisoner. He was an officer in the regular army and had served in the southwest before the war with many of the Confederate leaders arrayed against him at Harper's Ferry. In the early days of the war the southerner who stuck by the Union flag was considered by the south a traitor to his people.

The idea of escaping from Harper's Ferry as things stood was a bold one. The Virginia shore was alive with Confederates, and the Maryland region just north of Harper's Ferry was occupied by the main army of Lee. The details of the escape are told in plain soldier language in a sketch of the Eighth New York cavalry written by Henry Norton. After a brief account of the opening of the siege by Jackson's army the narrator says:

"The colonel made preparations to go out with his regiment and what cavalry remained there—two regiments and two detachments, numbering 1,300 in all. He got one of the old settlers who knew the country well to pilot him through Maryland, which was then occupied by the Confederate General Longstreet's corps. He had a scout watching the enemy's movements, for he knew the only way to get out was through Longstreet's lines.

"On the 14th of September everything was ready for us to get out of the Ferry if we could. In the evening about 8 o'clock we were drawn up in line, and our sutler, knowing that he could not get out with his goods, gave the boys what he had on hand. We crossed the Potomac to the Maryland side on a pontoon bridge. Before we crossed each captain gave orders that each man of his company must follow his file leader, and that no other orders would be given. We crossed the river by twos, while the colonel with his pilot went ahead to clear the road. When the head of the column got across the river, the men would start off at full speed, so by the time the last man was across the head of the line was 10 miles away. I was near the rear of the line, and the way we went was a caution. Each horse went as fast as he could go. By the time all had crossed it was dark. Dark was no name for it. It was just the right kind of a night for such an undertaking. The only way one could tell how far we were from our file leader was by the horses' shoes striking fire on the stones. Sometimes we would be 20 yards away from our file leader and then would come up full drive. Then we would hear some tall swearing. That was the way we went for several miles. The advance drove the enemy's pickets in soon after crossing the river. The Confederates were surprised to see Yankees coming from that direction. They thought we were cooped up in the Ferry and did not dare come out Potomac. Just before we reached the pike we halted in a piece in the woods. We could hear wagons rumbling along the road ahead of us. The colonel went forward to reconnoiter, and when he got to the road he soon found that it was a Confederate wagon train. As soon as he saw them it came into his head to capture that train. The train was guarded by 500 or 600 cavalry and some infantry. The cavalry was in the rear of the train, the infantry in front.

"When the advance of the wagon train came along to the crossroad, the colonel insisted that they should turn to the right on the pike that ran north into Pennsylvania. After he got the train started on that road he sent for the Eighth New York. This was just before daylight. We went ahead and took possession of the train. The Twelfth Illinois cavalry kept the Confederate cavalry in check while we were passing by the teams to take our places. One of the Confederate teamsters said to me, 'To what regiment do you belong?'

"'The Eighth New York,' I replied.

"'The hell you say!'

"Only the drivers of a few of the head teams knew then that they were prisoners. The rest did not know it until after day light. It was a big undertaking. The colonel might lose his whole command by doing it. At daylight we had the train all on the road that runs to Greencastle, Pa. Then came the tug of war to see if we could hold it. It was an ammunition train of nearly 100 wagons, with six mule teams to each wagon. We took between 200 and 300 prisoners who had crawled into the wagons to ride. One of them was an officer, an old acquaintance of Colonel Davis. He got out of the wagon, and after talking over old times a few minutes with the colonel said to him, 'I suppose for old acquaintance sake you will let me go to my command?'

"NO, SIR; YOU WILL GO WITH ME."

"'No, sir; you will go with me,' the colonel replied.

"That was enough. He went.

"Luck seemed to follow us all the way through. It was one of the greatest feats of the war. After the teamsters found that they were prisoners, weren't they mad? Mad was no name for it. They tried to stop the train. One fellow got off from his mule and began to unhitch the team from the wagon. Another tried to set fire to the straw in which the shells were packed. We put a stop to that. A cavalryman rode by the side of every driver and told him that he must keep his team going, for we would shoot the first man who did not obey orders. That quieted them.

"So on we went. We had not gone a great many miles when we heard firing in the rear. Those in advance thought it was all day with them, but our rear guard kept the enemy in check. The Confederate cavalry followed us up a number of miles. The reason they did not retake the train was that they did not know how much force we had and were afraid of getting too far north lest they might be drawn into a trap. So they let us go with our prize. We kept the train going as fast as we could and arrived in Greencastle about 9 o'clock a. m. on the 15th. When we arrived, the inhabitants at first would not believe what we had done, that we had marched from Harper's Ferry (over 30 miles), gone through Longstreet's corps and taken nearly 100 wagons from the enemy in 12 hours."

It was indeed a bold exploit. Forrest never carried out one that excelled it in energy or daring.

As a reward for his pluck Davis was promoted to lead a brigade. He was the inspiring genius of the movement, and his success set the country north and south agog with astonishment that the whole garrison of Harper's Ferry did not follow the cavalry out.

The first cavalry battle of the Gettysburg campaign, the meeting between Stuart and Pleasonton on the banks of the Rappahannock river, at Beverly Ford and Brandy Station, June 9, 1863, cut short the career of the bold leader of that escape. He was instantly killed at the head of his brigade while fighting Jones' cavalry. His brigade was in General Buford's division, and he would doubtless have succeeded that officer on his retirement a few months later and would have been the peer of Kilpatrick, Torbert, Custer, Gregg and Wilson as a bold marshal of squadrons.

Stealing a Redhot Stove.

"The incident often illustrated in plays of a man carrying off a redhot stove has no basic truth," said Halman Carmody. "Still the idea seems so preposterous that people never fail to laugh at the incident when placed before them on the stage. The nearest theft that I ever knew to parallel it occurred not so many years ago when an habitual criminal in New York city was given six months in the penitentiary for stealing a tinner's stove. The evidence proved that the criminal had a record which included everything from the theft of a paper of pins and a wagon wheel down to a water gauge of a steam engine and the stove in question.

"The tinner's stove was shown in court. It was a very old fashioned, large and ungainly looking affair, which one might imagine would be the last thing that would attract the attention of even a chronic burglar. The top was cylindrical and perfectly open for the purpose of draft. To this top was attached the handle. Now, the stove had a good fire in it and had been set out on the pavement to obtain extra flame. The thief must have found it a very hot object to handle, and yet he ran with it a dozen blocks before he was caught and arrested."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

SKIRMISH AT SHARPSBURG.

"About two miles from where the enemy's pickets were driven in the Confederates barricaded the road to stop us. The colonel knew what they would do, so before we got there he went across lots and gave them the slip. The pilot knew every foot of the ground in Maryland, and the scout knew how Longstreet's corps was situated, having come from there about an hour before we started from the Ferry. The colonel had his route mapped out before we started. He was bound to go through or die in the attempt. He managed to avoid the Confederates until he reached Sharpsburg, 10 miles from Harper's Ferry, where the advance had a brush with them. It did not last long, as the colonel ordered a charge and drove the enemy back. They retreated to camp, giving the alarm that the whole Yankee army was upon them. We learned afterward from some prisoners taken that the whole of Longstreet's corps stood in line the rest of the night, expecting to be attacked.

"As I was riding along trying to keep up to my file leader my horse kept shying every little while. Come to find out, there were cavalry horses lying in the road. They had been ridden so fast that they had dropped down dead by the wayside.

"About two miles out we began to go through the fields. We would go in the fields for awhile and then back in the road again. At one time we were so close to the enemy's camps that we could see the Confederates plainly by their campfires. On we went at full speed. I did not think at first that they were Confederates. I said to my file leader, William R. Gulle: 'Bill, what is the use of the colonel going farther? Here are our troops.' Bill said: 'They are not our troops. They are Confederates.' I said to Bill, 'We are goners, for we will all be captured.'

"When the advance reached Sharpsburg, 10 miles from Harper's Ferry, they made a halt, so that we could close up and let our horses get their wind, for we had been on a keen scoot ever since we left the river. We did not stay there long, perhaps half an hour. Then we went on again across flats, over fences, through creeks, as usual. We had to travel on byroads, for the enemy had pickets on all main roads. We had gone through Longstreet's corps. A great many would say that it was an impossibility for a force of 1,300 cavalry to do that. Had it not been in the night, and had the colonel not managed just as he did, we could not have done it. The Confederates were taken by surprise, for they thought we had a large force. So they waited for us to attack them. But we had other business about that time. All we wanted was to get out of there. If they would let us alone, we would them.

"After we left Sharpsburg we did not come across any more Confederates until we struck the pike running from Hagerstown, Md., west to Williamsport on the

The Club of the Future.

A growing opinion is that the coming club will be the mixed one, where men and women will study together the questions that present themselves and work out together the problems of the day. And this, it is asserted, will not be a consolidation of the distinctively women's and men's clubs as they now exist, but a merging of the best elements of each into fresh organizations.

Following this mixed club sentiment it is not surprising to find Mr. Stead in a London journal advocating "co-operative homes for the unmarried." By this he means that the co-operative homes for spinsters and those for bachelors should combine their housekeeping arrangements into a sort of idealized boarding house, where Mrs. Grundy would be appeased with "an experienced lady housekeeper" and where companies of detached or unattached men and women could find congenial acquaintance. The limitations of the word congenial Mr. Stead insists upon and admits that this matter of selection is the weak point in his scheme. The motion in any form grows out of a recognized drifting apart of the sexes under the changed condition of things.—New York Times.

CRUEL FRIENDS.

How a Dear and Loving Woman Tried a Mother's Patience.

In no respect are the friends outside the sanctuary of home crueler than in acting upon the conviction that what Mrs. Stowe defines as "terms of undress intimacy" with us justifies them in parcelling out our time to suit their convenience and pleasure. Women are most unconscionable in this species of torture. Men have been slaves to business for so many centuries that the masculine guest or neighbor, albeit a favorite crony, has a glimmering appreciation of the fact that his associates must have time in which to earn a living. The cruelest of friends is the woman who does nothing in particular and at no particular time and is so fond of you, who have a specific occupation and set hours for carrying it on, that she cannot be happy away from you and finds the day savorless which has not been salted by a comfortable talk between you and herself.

A very fiend of affectionate barbarity was a rich and idle woman who chose as her bosom friend the busy wife of a city clergyman and the mother of five children. Of these children she was also the governess until the boys were ready for the college preparatory school and sent her three girls from the family schoolroom to Smith and Vassar. She judged rightly that she would lay the foundation rudiments of thorough scholarship more conscientiously than hired instructors and enjoyed the noble task.

Her husband's parishioners were cognizant of her expressed desire that that part of the day lying between 9 and 1 o'clock should be devoted to her pupils, and, to the credit of those who did not aspire to the honor of such intimacy at the rectory as might warrant reversal of household arrangements, it may be stated that her eccentricity in this regard was generally respected.

The wealthiest vestryman's wife, by virtue of her peculiar attachment to the industrious housemother, spurned regulations not of her own making and declared her independence by word and deed. The rector's wife loved her for her many excellent qualities and valued her answering esteem. I think, nevertheless, that Mephistopheles would have been a more welcome apparition than the smiling visage that presented itself twice or thrice each week at the study door with the coaxing apology:

"I know you can't bear morning calls, but I was actually famishing for a glimpse of you. I'll just sit over here in the corner with my fancy work and never lisp a syllable—just feast my eyes and ears. The children don't mind the presence of mamma's dearest friend."

The children did mind, and mamma more than they, an intruder who distracted eyes and thoughts and embarrassed recitations none the less for the frequency of the visitation. A gravel stone in the shoe is one of the minor ills of the daily walk to which the flesh is slow to become reconciled. A common acquaintance could have been denied at the outer entrance, or had she reached the penetralia could have been bowed out into the drawing room. An uncommon friend grappled with the sufferer at a fatally short distance.—Marion Harland in Harper's Bazar.

Like a Thief in the Night,

Consumption comes. A slight cold, with your system in the scrofulous condition that's caused by impure blood, is enough to fasten it upon you. That is the time when neglect and delay are full of danger.

Consumption is Lung-scrotula. You can prevent it, and you can cure it, if you haven't waited too long, with Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. That is the most potent blood-cleanser, strength-restorer, and flesh-builder that's known to medical science. For every disease that has to be reached through the blood, for Scrofula in all its forms, Consumption, Weak Lungs, Bronchitis, Asthma, and all severe, lingering Coughs, it is the only guaranteed remedy. If it doesn't benefit or cure, you have your money back.

The proprietors of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy know that their medicine perfectly and permenently cures Catarrh. To prove it to you, they make this offer: If they can't cure your Catarrh, no matter what your case is, they'll pay you $500 in cash.
