following item: Lewis Chapman, one of the most successful and enterprising farmers and fruit growers of south Donglas county, shipped a carload of dried prunes from this place this week, to a firm at Red Lodge, Montana. Mr. Chapman informs us that from two acres of 7-year-old Petite prunes and that from 12 000 pounds of prunes and that from 12,000 pounds of prunes, and that from four acres he has realized $1040 at 61/2 cents per pound. The expenses figure from the time of cultivating about $40 per acre. Mr. Chapman has also shipped 4000 pounds of dried apples and says that he could handle several carloads, could they be correct at a good price. could they be secured, at a good price. Mr. Chapman is not at all discouraged with the present tone of the prune market but says he will set out more trees and can make big money on prunes at one-half the present price.

[From the telegraphic report of the last day's debate in the House (Thursday) on the Wilson tariff bill.

THE TARIFF ORATORS.

When Reed, the first speaker, arose, at last, to deliver his final plea for protection, the overhanging galleries were black and dense with spectators. Every inch. of space upon the floor was taken. Only 10 of the 354 members of the house were cost $100,000 or more each. Eight of absent. Many senators and other distinguished personages were on the floor, and in the galleries were Mrs. Cleveland, Mrs. Vice President Stevenson and other ladies of eminence and distinction. Then for three hours the oratory of the champions of the two economic systems followed—Reed, Crisp and Wilson—while their partisans made the air vocal with their shouts of approval. The appearance of the speaker of the house upon the floor, and engaged in debate, was in itself a remarkable as well as an unusual thing. Each of the speakers seemed to be in his best form, and the speeches today will rank among the most brilliant of their lives.

REED OF MAINE.

The chair recognized Reed of Maine. Reed arose from the republican side amid wild cheering and handclapping in the galleries and the huzzas of his friends, When quiet was finally restored, with his back to his friends and his face to his foes, towering in defiance, he began his odious to both sides of the house. It meets with favor nowhere, and commands the respect of neither party. On this side, while we believe that it pre-tends to be for protection, it does not afford it, and on the other side they beit opens our markets to the destructive vote for it will do so with the reservation that they will instantly devote themselves to a new crusade against whatever barriers are left. Reed proceeded by saying the argument that the bill should be passed to put an end to the doubt which is worse than any bill can be is specious and insidious, as were the bill passed by both branches today uncertainty would reign just the same. He then proceeded to argue at length on the benefits of the tariff from the standard of wages for the American laborer and for the American farmer. He said: "I confess to you that this question of wages is to me a vital question. To insure our growth in civilization and wealth we must not only have wages as high as they are now, but constantly and steadily increasing. The progress of this nation is dependent upon the progress of all. Why did the working people of California object to have not been here as long as I have without learning that constitutionality and unconstitutionality on either side of income tax. Ten republicans and 11 the chamber are mere phrases, and that democrats are on the committee. when a gentleman of the other side, with swelling voice, denounces the tariff as anconstitutional, he merely means that he does not like it. "There is still another argument which I desire to present, out of the large number yet unused. What has made England rich? It is the immense profits which come of converting raw material into manufactured goods. So long as she can persuade the rest of the world to en-PLUM, PRUNE, CHERRY, gage in the work which is the least profitable, and leave her the most enriching, she can well be contented. We are the only rival that England fears, for we alone have within our borders the popula-tion and the wages, the raw material, and within ourselves the great mraket which insure to us the most improved machinery. Our power to increase our wages insures us also continuous progress. If you wish us to follow the example of Eugland, I say yes, with all my heart; but her real example, and nothing less. Let us keep protection, as she did, until no rival dares to invade our territory, and then we will take our chances for the future, which by that time will not be restored he was recognized to reply to Reed. Until he warmed he spoke with hesitation, but as he became warmed up his words came in a perfect torrent, sweeping resistlessly over all opposition and he was encouraged by the hearty applauses of his democratic associates. His points, however, were of an argumentive order, calculated to appeal to the students of the question, rather than the galleries. He declared that while the protective system was built up ostensibly for the benefit of labor, it was actually for the benefit of the manufacturing duced by protection, which was a Chinese wall, not only shutting out the world, but shutting in the United States. Crisp declared that 30 years of protec-Does a General Banking Rusiness.

Throughout Reed's speech was frequently interrupted by applause, and even the democrats at times joined in laughter at his witticisms. At the close he was greeted with a spontaneous, long-continued burst of applause, and he was warmly congratulated by his friends.

CRISP REPLIES TO REED.

Consp declared that 30 years of protection was a period of unrest, during which the masses constantly rebelled against burdensome taxation. They always had been stilled at the polls by republican promises to reduce the tariff. Elected, they surrender themselves body and soul to the manufacturers. policy of 1000 years. WILSON CLOSES THE DEBATE.

Wilson, chairman of the ways and means committee, at once arose to close the debate. He was greeted with great cheers. He opened with sarcastic replies to Burrows of Michigan, and Doliver of Iowa. Turning to the subject in hand he eloquently portrayed the advance of freedom. "This bill," he said, "is one of those advances; no McKinley bill could stem the advance of human progress. Great causes could not be laughed or ridiculed away, and the gentleman from Maine could not draw from his armory of sarcasm and wit to stop the advance of this cause of lightening burdenous taxation." Referring to the income tax, Wilson said he had not wanted it attached to this bill, but once attached he supported it levelly. supported it loyally. There was continued applause as Wilson denied the charges of a sectionalism in the bill. He closed with an eloquent appeal to his fellow democrats, saying in passing the bill the house would permanently record no mere passing event, but a great epoch in American history.

As Wilson closed Tucker and several others sprang forward, and as wave after wave of applause echoed through the chamber, lifted him from his feet and bore him up the aisle. When let down he received the enthusiastic congratulations of his confrantations. tions of his confreres. It was a demonstration such as is seldom seen in congress. Business was at a standstill for 20 minutes on account of the disorder. Reed began by saying that the bill was | Finally the floors were cleared and preparations made for voting.

No Tragedy Like Poverty.

There is no tragedy like that of poverty. No pain can grind the human heart like that which comes to the husband and wife when they face the cold fact that he is "out of work," and then look at the tender faces of the little ones so confident that the father can take care of them. Yet we know that in thousands of homes in the happy land of America this tragedy is being enacted. If we knew that some fiend was passing from house to house, killing women and dashing children's brains out, how long would the good people permit it to continue. Yet poverty is worse. The slow, dull agony at heart, the faint flicker of expectation when returning feet are heard, the dead weight on the heart when she reads in his face "no work." This is a pain that no rich and happy woman can un-derstand. One must feel it—one must know how cruelly precious a dollar can seem—to understand what real suffering is. One must realize what it is to be cold and hungry in the midst of a city full of happy, careless, heartless people, who waste the precious money, and who revel in and grow tired of the light and warmth and food, for want of which little While the demonstration was still in progress, Crisp relinquished the chair to Hatch of Missouri, and took a seat on the floor of the house. "The voice of the bosses must be the voice of the people."

Now, we (that is to say the youthful editor of the News) feel somewhat mortified over the fact that for three long weary months we have been marching along in the rear ranks of the populist army and have not received that recognition and respect that our position as editor of a prominent journal would justly entitle us to. The attention of the club has been so taken up with independent thinking and kicking that we have not been noticed. We have waited patiently to be dragged from our humble corner and pushed to the front. But patience is no longer a virtue. "God helps him who helps himself," shall henceforth be our motto. The club must have a boss. To get along without one would be a flagrant departure from time honored custom in American politics. We have elected ourselves to that position. The vote was unanimous. Henceforth our dictum must be law and gospel for the club. Faithful obedience to all our commands will insure peace and harmony. It is with extreme reluctance that we thus resort to heroic measures, but our deep and undying devotion to the interests of the people's party and the stub-born and persistent attempts of many members to do their own thinking, have led us to take the step. Therefore, we give due notice that henceforth if the club "deviate in the least" from our ex-pressed wishes we shall double the subscription price of the News, See? [The above is quite a Breezy hint from
