International Arbitration.

England is probably not afraid of the United States, and the United States is certainly not afraid of England. Therefore it is fitting that these two great countries should take the initiative in international arbitration. We are one in language and methods of thought and closely united. We are one in being unconquerable and determined to uphold our own dignity and rights the world over. We are also the two most powerful nations on the globe. So if England and the United States form a treaty for arbitrating misunderstandings that arise between them the example will be followed by other governments, and the reign of universal peace will be the nearer for it.

Such are some of the arguments that will be advanced by William Randal Cremer, M. P., who comes to this country as a semiofficial international arbitration agent. His mission is semiofficial in that he himself is a member of parliament, and the address he will lay before President Cleveland and every member of congress is signed only by members of the British parliament. The London Daily News warmly advocates such arbitration and says that if it lasted 25 years it would probably last forever. The address in favor of a treaty of international arbitration between the United States and Great Britain is signed by 345 members of parliament.

The United States agricultural department is investigating human food, with the view of ascertaining what are the best articles for farmers to produce. Bulletins are to be issued dealing with the nutritive and digestible qualities of different things we eat. This will be admirable, if the writers of the papers do not hurl in so many of their blessed long names which nobody can understand, and if, at the end, they give a clear idea of what the farmer ought to raise that will be at once best for his own pocket and other persons' stomachs.

A Boston lecturing lady teaches that anger and unpleasant feelings cause chemical products in the body that injure and in time ruin the health. The chemical result of good temper and honesty on the other hand is health.

B. H. Bowman, Pub. Enquirer, of Bremen, Ind., writes: Last week our little girl baby the only one we have was taken sick with croup. After two doctors failed to give relief and life was hanging on a mere thread we tried One Minute Cough Cure and its life was saved. E. A. Sherwin.

Both Wicked.

"My husband," said the large, fleshy lady, "has a habit of marking paragraphs in the paper that say mean things about women."

"So you will not fail to see them, eh? Still that is not as mean a trick as mine plays. He cuts them all out. Then I have to get another paper only to find that I have been fooled again.' —Indianapolis Journal.

Professor James Has Recanted.

What this country would do without its own American Psychological association heaven only knows! The American Psychological association hold a convention once a year to discuss the soul. If to be acquainted with his soul a common person must delve into such mysteries as anthropometry and hyperæsthesia, then he could be almost glad to know he hadn't any soul. But these are the mighty themes settled by the American Psychological association.

The greatest sensation of the late psychological convention at Princeton university was occasioned by the recantation of Professor William James of Harvard. Professor James is considered the highest strictly scientific authority on soul matters in America. His decisions, therefore, may be considered of vital importance. When he recants, he recants all over, so to speak. When he wrote a book on psychology some time since, Professor James distinctly stated in that lucidity of language for which scientific professors are noted that states of mind subjectively considered ought not to be called complex.

It seems the professor has found out better. He turns his back squarely on his former dictum and now admits frankly that states of mind subjectively considered may be called complex. This is a tremendous admission. But while he admits this he still obstinately declares that the complexity is not what it is described to be by the associationist school. On that statement he plants himself, sink or swim, survive or perish, and he will live and die by it. Our readers are therefore warned to beware of the complexity of states of mind subjectively considered by the associationist school. We are always glad to be set right in these matters.

Hopeful Signs.

Ministers used to stay in their studies and write sermons on doctrinal topics. College professors used to drill Latin, Greek and mathematics into their pupils in dingy, badly ventilated classrooms. Neither preacher nor college professor had an idea that he had anything in common with the living, throbbing life and suffering of everyday humanity. That has changed. If you take up any magazine or almost any newspaper, you will find in it communications from both divines and college professors. The preacher does not discourse on the Trinity or vicarious atonement. The professor does not descant on the spelling of an original Greek root.

They write of problems of sanitation and of social economics. The preacher writes of the slums he has investigated and of the corruption in municipal government that the American people must destroy. The college professor writes concerning food and its relations to the human body. He analyzes this and that article of food, tells the common man what will make him fat and what will build muscle. The most learned men in the land now deal with the problems of heating, lighting and ventilating dwelling houses. How to help the condition of the poor workingmen and distribute the world's wealth are questions that occupy the earnest attention of preacher, college professor and statesman. It is the brightest spot in the sky on which the nineteenth century closes.

We take off our hat to Miss Annie Nesbit, night operator of the telegraph office at Bonner Springs, Kan. A burglar attempted to rob the office. He thought he would have an easy job, since only a woman was there to protect it. But Annie Nesbit tackled the burglar, and, although he beat her black and blue, yet she held on to him and made so much noise meantime that at length he fled without getting even a postage stamp.

"It would be hard to find a more degraded body of men," says Prosecutor Goff, concerning the New York city police department. What interests other parts of the country is the question whether the police of New York are alone in their degradation.

DO YOU EXPECT To Become a Mother? If so, then permit us to say that Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is indeed, a true "Mother's Friend," FOR IT MAKES Childbirth Easy by preparing the system for parturition, thus assisting Nature and shortening "Labor." The painful ordeal of childbirth is robbed of its terrors, and the dangers thereof greatly lessened, to both mother and child. The period of confinement is also greatly shortened, the mother strengthened and built up, and an abundant secretion of nourishment for the child promoted.

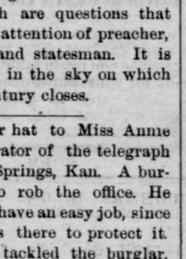
PAINLESS CHILDBIRTH.

MRS. FRED HUNT, of Glenville, N. Y., says: "I read about Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription being so good for a woman with child, so I got two bottles last September, and December 13th I had a twelve pound baby girl. When I was confined I was not sick in any way. I did not suffer any pain, and when the child was born I walked into another room and went to bed. I keep your Extract of Smart-Weed on hand all the time. It was very cold weather and our room was very cold but I did not take any cold, and never had any after-pain or any other pain. It was all due to God and Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and Compound Extract of Smart-Weed. This is the eighth living child and the largest of them all. I suffered everything that flesh could suffer with the other babies. I always had a doctor and then he could not help me very much, but this time my mother and my husband were alone with me. My baby was only seven days old when I got up and dressed and left my room and stayed up all day."



MRS. HUNT.

SHADOW OF A HAND.

Business called me to Dieppe in the summer of 1846. The cashier of one of the largest banks in New York had absconded with the funds of the institution, and I had followed his tracks. Late at the close of the 14th of August I reached my destination and immediately repaired to my hotel. The first note of the cock awoke me. The town clock struck 4. I resolved to take a look at the city at daybreak.

I was astonished, on reaching the street, to see it full of people rushing in a ceaseless tide in one direction. Wondering what the attraction could be, I followed the ever increasing crowd surging down the Rue Grande. At the foot of the street was a large open square, where the crowd formed a perfect jam. From a platform at the opposite side I distinguished dark outlines that froze the blood in my veins. It was the guillotine. It was not long until a bell tolled a doleful death clangor, and the tumbrel with the condemned slowly approached. The executioner addressed himself deftly to his task, and in a few moments all was over.

"Who was the man, and why was he executed?" I inquired of a police agent at my side. He looked at me with astonishment and said, "Indeed, sir, it was Jacques Reynauld."

My curiosity was excited, and before I left Dieppe I had gathered all the details of the life and crimes of the dead man.

No longer than four months before there lived in the Rue des Armes a huckster named Morris, who was honestly but frugally supporting himself, his wife and child from the profits of his trade.

"I should relish some oysters today," said Mme. Morris as her husband entered one Sunday.

"I fear it is too late, my dear. It's a quarter past 9 o'clock."

"Justine thought that the shop at the corner might be open."

"Send her, then. The truth is, I am myself as hungry as a wolf."

The servant took a basket to get the oysters and left the door partly open to save her master the trouble of unlocking it when she returned. The shop at which she was to get the oysters was locked, and Justine went down the Rue Grande to procure them elsewhere, if possible. She had been absent three-quarters of an hour. To her surprise, Justine found the house locked. She thought the wind had blown the door shut, and she tried the knob. "They must have retired," thought Justine, indignant that they had locked her out.

In her anxiety she related her troubles to several passersby. The police were sent for, and the door was forced. The hall was dark. One of the gendarmes stumbled over an object. He stooped down, and his hand touched something wet. A light was procured, and a horrible scene was revealed. Poor Morris lay in the hall with his throat cut. The whole floor was covered with blood. In the little room lay his wife, with a horrible wound across her throat. The assassin had not even spared the infant in the cradle. The poor little creature had met the same fate as his parents. The house was sacked.

Eight days after the crime several men were passing along the Rue Grellard. Suddenly a man clad in nothing but his shirt appeared on a roof carrying a child in his arms and crying, "Murder, murder!" A rush was made for the door, but it was found to be locked from within. A few crashing blows sufficed to break it, and a man ran up stairs. In the fore hall, at the head of the stairs, a man was found with his throat cut. He was dead. In the chamber a woman was found dangling out of bed with a similar wound, and in the kitchen lay the servant girl, disposed of in a like manner. It was undoubtedly the work of the same person that had committed the crime in the Rue des Armes.

The young man who had been seen on the roof gave this testimony:

"My name is Pierre Dulac. I am a watchmaker. For two years I have been employed in the house of the murdered Manton, whose family consisted of his wife, a child and a servant girl. I slept in an attic chamber. Next to me slept the servant girl, who usually had the child with her. It was about 2 o'clock in the morning when I awoke, feeling very thirsty. My water pitcher was empty, and I started to get a fresh supply, but before I had time to descend the first flight of stairs I saw a man sneaking up the lower flight.

"Being very nervous, the murder in the Rue des Armes had so stunned my faculties that, when I saw the man, I was positively unable to move hand or foot. The stranger had nearly reached the door which led to M. Manton's room when the door of the same suddenly opened, and my employer stepped out. The murderer hurled himself upon him and pressed his hand upon his mouth to prevent outcry. I noticed that the villain had only three fingers on his left hand. I ran up stairs again and entered the girl's chamber. Marie was not there, but the child was fast asleep. I took it in my arms and ran up on the roof."

In the faubourg of Dieppe, in a rather obscure house, all alone with a servant girl, resided a widow named Beaumaurice. She was the widow of an army officer and distinguished for great firmness of character. The excitement throughout the city had not been able to disturb her composure, despite the fact that she was comparatively unprotected.

On the 30th of April, at about 10 o'clock, Mme. Beaumaurice, who had all day suffered from a painful headache, entered her boudoir. She was very tired and sat down in a large easy chair to rest herself. Opposite her stood her dressing case, whose curtains extended down to the floor. Back of her, upon a small table, stood the lamp. The lady had begun to disrobe herself when she noticed something that made her heart stop beating. On the floor she descried the shadow of a man's hand. The hand had but three fingers.

The murderer was concealed within her dresser. After a short deliberation she approached the door and called the servant.

"Marie," said she, "do you know where M. Bernard lives?"

"Very well, my lady."

"I forgot that I shall have to pay 500 francs tomorrow morning. You must go immediately and get the money. To insure your getting the bank notes from M. Bernard I will write you a note."

DEAR BERNARD—The murderer of the Rue des Armes and the Rue Grellard is in my house. Bring the gendarmes and take him.

HELEN BEAUMAURICE.

She handed the servant the note and sent her away. She then sat down and waited. Yes, a full hour the lady sat in her room, within whose dressing case the murderer was concealed. The shadow of the hand, apparent now and then, was the only evidence of the presence of the murderer. When finally the gendarmes arrived, Jacques Reynauld was taken prisoner.—Exchange.

A Startling Announcement.

An English literary man who was on the verge of bringing out a book at the Pitt Press ordered his proofs to be sent to him at a house where he was engaged to dine out, intending to look them over in the half hour after dinner. The printer's boy however, was late in bringing them, and the gentlemen had already rejoined the ladies in the drawing room when the company was electrified by hearing the sonorous voice of the butler announcing, "The devil from the Pitt has come for Mr. Jones!"—San Francisco Argonaut.

No Inspiration.

The table roars when Kitty speaks.
She neither halts nor stutters,
And every maid and matron seeks
To catch each word she utters.

"Just like a man!" the girls all say,
And some say, "Even better!"
Who once has heard her fancy play
Can never quite forget her.

But when I hear her praises ring
The wonder, I declare, is
That any girl can do this thing
On plain apollinaris! —Vogue.

The Child and the Man.

Once upon a time it chanced that a Child accosted a Man, saying:

"Papa, may we play in the street?"

The Man replied and spake:

"I should say not. Today is Sunday."

And the Child came back at the Man presently and quoth:

"But, papa, we will call it a sacred concert."

And the Man said nothing, since there was nothing to say.—Detroit Tribune.

Dabster Misunderstood.

Figg—What kind of a writer is Dabster? Is he possessed of descriptive powers?

Fogg—Unfortunately, yes.

Figg—Unfortunately?

Fogg—Yes. In his recent sketch of a western girl he spoke of her commercial traveler manner and her generous understanding. The Chicago people allowed that the "commercial traveler manner" was a compliment of which anybody except in the effete east might well be proud, but they suspected that the other characterization was a cheap fling at the size of women's shoes, and after that his writings were a drug in the western market—Boston Transcript.

The Polite British Waiter.

The extreme politeness of the average English waiter is a continual source of merriment.

He thanks you when he brings your soup, again when he brings your napkin, when he takes away your plate, when he happens to find you looking at him—in fact, he says, "Thank you," at every turn, and says it in such a jerky, mechanical fashion that you cannot repress a smile. His example is followed by the bus conductor, who thanks you for your fare and thanks you again when he hands you your ticket, and by the theater usher when he seats you, and by every servant you meet, in the most inappropriate manner. They overdo the "thank you" business, and always employ the same jerky manner and mechanical tone.—Chicago Record.

J. A. Richardson, of Jefferson City, Mo., Chief Enrolling force 38th general assembly of Missouri, wriies: I wish to testify to the merits of One Minute Cough Cure. When other so-called cures failed, I obtained almost instant relief and a speedy cure by the use of One Minute Cough Cure, E. A. Sherwin.

News and Notes.

Italian bees are now conceded to be the best bees for this country.

The area of the new wheat crop is reduced at many points, in a few enlarged, with some probable reduction in the average.

A large proportion of the cider consumed in England is of American manufacture.

The average apple crop of 1894 is the poorest in quality of any year for the last seven.

A bounty on foxes is desired in many sections of the country.

The painting of house and whitewashing or painting of outbuildings, fences and gates should be looked to and renewed as often as needed for appearance's sake as well as for the sake of preserving the wood.

The western farmer is beginning to find out that successive corn and wheat crops are too exhaustive of the soil. When he sows more clover, he will find, after a few years, that his soil will better retain moisture, and this will supply his crop in the destructive droughts which now prevail.

The supply of evaporated apples has been much larger this fall than usual, but an active demand has kept the market well cleared.

California growers will next try shipping fruit in tight cars filled with carbonic acid gas, which, it is claimed, will preserve the fruit without damage to its flavor. It is expected to prove cheaper than cold storage.

The returns relative to the feeding of wheat to stock are not sufficient to justify a report at this date.

At the Cincinnati garbage furnace works, ashes are sold at $8 per ton for fertilizer.

Prematureness means impotency in the first stage. It is a symptom of seminal weakness and barrenness. It can be stopped in 20 days by the use of Hudyan.

The new discovery was made by the Specialists of the old famous Hudson Medical Institute. It is the strongest vitalizer made. It is very powerful, but harmless. Sold for $1.00 a package or 6 packages for $5.00 (plain sealed boxes). Written guarantee given for a cure. If you buy six boxes and are not entirely cured, six more will be sent to you free of all charges.
