TOO LATE

The day will come when you will look back from the edge of the grave to the beginning, years ago, and wish that you could have those years again.

The day will come when you will long for the hours that are wasting today—the hours you are "passing"—and wish that you had the chance to do what you should have done years ago and sigh for the wasted opportunities.

You will then realize that a substantial bank account you might now have if you had even put a few dollars into the bank each week. But it will be too late. Let this be your lesson. You will find it more profitable than vain regretting. All you need is a dollar to start your bank account.

Don't wait another day. One dollar will start you.

ADVENTISTS IN CAMP.

Southern Oregon Conference in Session at Medford.

As previously announced in these columns, the annual campmeeting of the Southern Oregon Conference of Seventh Day Adventists convened in Medford last Thursday. About 15 tents were erected at the encampment, located upon North Beatty street. The campers represented many localities in the conference territory, which comprises all of western Oregon south of Linn county, including also Klamath and Lake counties. The services began upon Thursday evening with an address by Elder H. W. Cottrell of Portland, president of the western Oregon conference, upon the power of the word of God and its importance to the believer.

The first session of conference was held at 9 o'clock Friday morning, at which hour of each day except Sabbath a session will be held until business of this nature is disposed of. Delegates were seated and standing committees were appointed.

Other ministers in attendance are as follows: W. A. Spicer and Meade McGuire of Washington, D. C.; F. S. Bunch of Gravel Ford, president of this conference; H. G. Thurston of Salem, C. J. Cole of Eugene, L. A. Gibson of Cottage Grove, B. C. Tabor of Ashland, and T. G. Bunch, pastor of the local church.

In addition to the above there are present Dr. Ada Smith-Crawford of Cottage Grove; J. F. Beatty of Portland, agent of the Pacific Press; J. P. Wheeler, secretary of this conference; E. A. Hamilton, miscellaneous secretary, and Miss Grace Davison, general secretary of the Sunday schools and young people's work. Others worthy of mention are expected soon.

Three general services are held each day—11 a. m., 2 and 8 p. m. The people of Medford and vicinity are cordially invited to attend all of these services.

You may be justified in blowing your own horn, but not in going on a tour.

RABID DOG AT MEDFORD

Boston Terrier Owned by Mrs. Bob Fitzsimmons Brings Disease From Portland.

Mail Tribune: A Boston terrier belonging to Mrs. Bob Fitzsimmons, wife of the puglist, who is filling a theatrical engagement here, was killed Friday by Dr. J. L. Helms, city veterinarian, after observation had convinced him that it was afflicted with rabies.

The animal, which was highly pedigreed and a valuable animal, was brought down with the troupe from Portland Wednesday. Thursday it began snapping at people and showing other suspicious symptoms. Dr. Helms was called, confined the dog, found it suffering from rabies and killed it.

This is the first case of rabies in southern Oregon. The dog had been kept in the rear of one of the hotels and so far as known had not bitten any other animal. The infection probably occurred in Portland, where two men died this week from rabies and several dogs have been found afflicted.

Mayor Elfert at once ordered that all dogs in the city be kept muzzled or tied up at home, as it is not known whether the affected animal bit other dogs or not.

In view of the fact that it is easy for the disease to be carried from one city to another as shown above, it would be wiser to order all dogs in Ashland either confined or muzzled. It is better to be safe than sorry.

Star Theatre—"The Two Merchants"

Competition is the life of trade in rural communities as well as larger states, but in the small towns business in competition is often fraught with many petty jealousies and rivalries. Merchants are often at daggers' points with each other, will hardly speak, and in a trade will often take advantage of each other; but let an outsider put in his appearance and the whole village, rivals and all hands, are against the Philistine.

Ebenezer Burke and Jeremiah Briggs are in the same line of business in the small city of Bedford. Julia Burke has become fascinated with a traveling salesman and she receives court from him against her father's wishes. They plan an elopement, but their plan is frustrated by Briggs, who asserts that it is his business to protect her even if he is her father's rival.

While out driving with his family, Briggs sees the salesman waiting in a secluded spot with a buggy. Becoming suspicious at once, he stops and watches him. He soon sees Julia coming with a suitcase and his suspicions are confirmed. Jumping out of his carriage, he rushes over to the buggy and seizes the girl. The salesman attempts to interfere but Briggs thrusts him aside and Julia is taken back home in the Briggs equipage, dissolved in tears.

Burke is wild with rage at this interference on the part of his rival and he decides that the meddlesome old codger has gone too far entirely. Early next morning Burke is at his store, waiting for the appearance of Briggs. When he arrives the climax is reached. Into the back yard of Briggs' store they go and fight it out in true country style. Both "winded," they realize that they are a couple of old fools and a reconciliation takes place. They join hands and fight the appearance of a new store.

The several characters drawn in this are delightful and true to nature, and no doubt will be appreciated by all who are acquainted with life in our smaller country towns.
