Humbling a Child's Pride.
(By Ella Bartlett Simmons)
A child's self-respect should never be sacrificed. It is as essential to him as it is to his parent. Self-respect is not pride and should not be looked upon as such. A child would far better have a reasonable degree of pride, however, than to possess no self-respect.

Mothers sometimes have exceedingly queer ideas on the subject of humbling a child's pride; they forget that while they are attempting to do this they are, in reality, taking from the boy or girl the very element of God-given self-respect.

To this day I feel sorry for my mother when I think of an incident which occurred when she was a little child. She says that one cold day she sat down on the stove hearth to get her back warm. Presently she smelled woolen burning, and at the same time, began to feel warmer than warm. She jumped up, realizing that her clothing was on fire.

Grandmother noticed the conflagration at once, and seizing a braided rug, wrapped Ruby in it. The flames were soon extinguished, but not before the new flannel dress had a sad hole in the back breadth.

To punish her for her carelessness, and to "humble her pride," Ruby was made to wear that dress to school with an ugly patch in the back until it was worn out. "If we had been poor people and there had been nothing with which to buy another dress, I could have stood it; but as it was, I was bitter and rebellious all the time, and took especial pains to do daring, careless things, so that I might tear and otherwise wear out the dress more quickly.

It did not humble my pride; it only made me more proud," my mother confessed to me. "It took away my self-respect and almost ruined my disposition for the time being."

I know a mother who makes her daughter's clothes, year in and year out, after the same model; she says it will cause her child to become proud if she is dressed in the prevailing fashion all the time. Poor child! I pity her; she is awkward and self-conscious, unhappy and unlovable. Who is to blame?

How much wiser is the mother who says that she consults fashion sheets, and feels it her duty to do so, that with limited means she may dress her children as other children are dressed—because she wants to inculcate in them a spirit of self-respect; without which no one can live at his best.

To wound self-respect by compelling a child to wear ill-fitting, manifestly old-fashioned clothes to school may result in creating the very desire for dress which a mother is trying to suppress. When a child is dressed becomingly, though simply, it serves to teach the desirable lesson of personal neatness. To wear something ugly and undesirable would keep her mind on the matter of her dress, keeping her unhappy and preventing her doing good work in school. It might subject her to the jeers of her companions, and hurt her heart while not humbling her pride.

Some children have an undue amount of vanity and want to wear clothes which are too fine. In such a cases there is no injustice in insisting that suitable, plain attire shall be worn, but there is nothing gained by making a child a laughing-stock in order to "humble her pride."

RECIPES.
Jelly Roll.
Beat 3 eggs and a cup of sugar until light and creamy and add 2 cups of sifted flour. Use no shortening. Bake in a large shallow pan, turn out on a damp cloth, spread with jelly and roll white warm. This will not break when rolled and is light and spongy.

Cake-Baking Tip.
To bake a cake well and with little trouble, have two cake tins the same size and shape. Put the cake mixture into one tin and place the other over it so that the rims meet. Not so much gas or heat is required, and the cake will rise better, as the cooler air caused by opening the oven door is not allowed to penetrate.

Peanut Brittle.
Shell one quart of peanuts, removing the inner skins, and chop lightly. Scatter them evenly over a buttered tin or platter. Put two cups of granulated sugar in granite dish, place over the fire, stir constantly, especially around the edges where it will burn quickest, until melted, and pour at once over the peanuts. When cold, break in small pieces.

To Prevent Cake Sticking.
Grease the cake pans with lard and sprinkle with flour. Remove the loose flour and put in the dough.

Fruit Cookies.
Half a cup of sugar, 1 cupful of cream and shortening, 1 cup of fruit syrup, jam or jelly, in which stir 2 teaspoonfuls of soda; flavor with spices; add flour enough to roll and cut.

Date Loaf Cake.
A pound of dates, with pits removed; a pound of English walnut meats, left whole; sift a cup of flour, 2 rounding teaspoonfuls of baking powder and 1/2 teaspoonful of salt together three times. Mix all thoroughly and add a cup of granulated sugar. Beat the whites of 4 eggs stiff and yolks till thick and mix the yolks thoroughly in the dough. Add the whites and a teaspoon of vanilla. Bake in a moderate oven for an hour in a loaf-cake pan lined with buttered paper.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS.
Timesaver.
Fasten a small thread or string to your front doorknob and put it in your handbag with one end of the string around the clasp. When you are late getting home you will have no trouble in getting the key out in a hurry.

To Keep the Teeth White.
Put a few drops of camphor and a pinch of borax in the water about twice a week. This will keep the teeth from turning yellow.

Woodbox.
A woodbox that takes up no room space and is filled from the outside can be made like a wall cupboard, having a door fitted into and flush with the face to the wall. A wide, loose baseboard held by cleats prevents the fuel from interfering with the door and permits cleaning. On the outside is a heavily built box with a rainproof sloping trap door, so hinged that when open it will rest against the building, and having the face and bottom sloping inward so as to throw fuel against the inside baseboard.

Wallpaper Hint.
When papering a room, if the wind drives the rain under the weather boarding and wets and stains the wall paper, try this method: Tack oil cloth on the wall, the slick side next the wall, and paste the paper on the cloth side of the oil cloth. You will have no more trouble with wet or stained wallpaper. I tried this three years ago, and my wallpaper looks like new, while previous to this it was ruined by the rain.
