Mr. Lowe Visits Eastern Oregon

LaGrande Observer: D. M. Lowe of Ashland, Ore., passed through the city this morning on his way to Elgin, where he expects to find a number of his former scholars and friends. Mr. Lowe is not now a teacher, but one of the most progressive boosters for the state of Oregon. He is going to the Chicago land show in the capacity of state commissioner. Not only that, but he has some 3,000 pounds of products grown on his farm that will vie with the best products displayed there for first money, and he wants to be on the ground to see the blue ribbon come his way. In all he will have 281 entries, and it is safe to assert that if he could take most of the first prizes at the Portland show last year he will hardly run second at Chicago, for the produces of the Rogue River Valley have an international reputation. Mr. Lowe is a civil engineer by profession and farmer by choice. He is owner of a 100-acre pear orchard and is successful by reason of being in close touch with the agricultural school. But all of this is of minor importance to the scheme which Mr. Lowe has for the year 1915. It is his purpose to boost the state during the Panama-Pacific exposition by a display of the products of Oregon. He is going to ask the legislature for an appropriation of $5,000, which will enable all farmers and producers of the state to make an exhibit at the gateway of Oregon, his own city of Ashland. Furthermore, he purposes to induce travelers to the fair to have their railroad tickets routed through Oregon. Ashland being the first city which the traveler from the far east will see on coming into the state, a first impression, after traveling over some hundred miles of mountain waste in northern California, will prove of incalculable value in inducing prospective settlers to make Oregon a favored spot. "I want you to say for me," said he, "that I have nothing to sell, not even an acre of ground, and I am doing all this for the real benefit of the state. I intend to hold all the land I own and increase it if I can. On my return trip from Elgin I would like to meet your Commercial Club, for I have a number of interesting things to tell them."
