Cleaning up the Watershed

Matters in regard to Ashland Canyon and Ashland's water supply are always of interest to Ashland readers and always should be. Several came up for discussion at Tuesday night's council meeting. The disposition made of these is recounted below.

The city has agreed to haul wire to Long's Cabin for Messrs. Heeson and Kleinhammer, who desire to fence their range in the forest reserve to prevent their herds on the divide into the Ashland watershed, where twenty-one had died last year from eating larkspur. The cattlemen wanted the city to deliver the wire to the fence line, but this means a hard and expensive pack up the hills.

The water committee has investigated the proposal of W. A. Conner to sell seventy acres just above the lower intake for $1650 and declares the price too high as compared to that paid for other tracts. The committee asks for further time to investigate the offer of Martin brothers to sell 330 acres above the power house on which they estimate there is 2,800,000 feet of saw timber.

Superintendent Butterfield of the electric light system reports that the conservation reservoirs above the power house on the east and west forks of Ashland creek have been thoroughly cleaned out and that the capacity of the latter has been doubled by the removal of rocks and fallen timber etc.

The work of installing eight or ten drinking fountains along Main street and the Boulevard will be begun in the course of a week or ten days by the city water department, which is now busy with the laying of 4000 feet of water pipe on the west side of town. The pipe is the ten-inch that was taken up when the larger pipes were laid over Crownson hill. The fountains will probably be of cement with porcelain tops and will be of sufficient size and artistic design to present a dignified appearance. While the water department is at this work the school board will also have two erected at the high school.

First Broomcorn Shipment.

Probably the first shipment of broom corn ever sent out of the Rogue River Valley was shipped from Ashland to Seattle on Monday of this week. The car was loaded and shipped by J. G. Miller and son of the Southern Oregon Broom Manufacturing Company and represents the surplus grown in the valley last year for the local broom company.

The quality of the broom corn grown in this valley is superior to that grown in most of the eastern states. Its long, tough fiber is excelled only by the product grown in Illinois, and coast manufacturers are glad to get it.

Mr. Miller states that it will not be the policy of the company to ship out the surplus corn in the future as he will increase the capacity of his factory this summer until it can handle all of the corn that will be grown in the valley.

Council Held

Dull Session

City council met Tuesday night with all members present. No business of importance was done.

The petition of various citizens on Oak street for a bridge, the approximate cost of which will be $150, was granted and the street committee instructed to proceed with the work.

The employment of a city dog-catcher with police powers was authorized and provision made to amend the charter so that licensed dogs may be restrained from running at large except when accompanying their masters. Every groceryman in the city except one has endorsed the move to restrain the dogs.

The ordinance against rendering lard and smoking hams inside the city limits will be modified so that this branch of industry may be carried on under proper restrictions—consisting of cement rendering and smoking establishments with adequate vents for smoke and odors. A provision will also be added to prevent the offering for sale of slaughtered fowls that have not been drawn etc.

The special committee on hitch-racks reports that the racks have been moved from the site of the new theatre and have been relocated behind the stores of R. A. Minkler and the Ashland Trading Company. The same committee has been charged with the duty of looking up a new site for the public market.

Considerable ginger was injected into Tuesday night's council meeting following the presentation of a petition signed by 225 citizens in support of the Chautauqua Park Club's request for city aid in the care of their park. Councilman Ashcraft moved to turn the matter over for a thorough working out by the finance committee of the council in conjunction with the Park Board and the Chautauqua Park Club. The motion carried.

A remonstrance signed by practically every business man on The Plaza was considered by the city council Tuesday night. They ask the repeal of that section of the traffic ordinance which specifies that autos shall not be left standing for longer than ten minutes on the street between Water and Mill streets. They specify that their business is injured thereby. It is admitted, however, by many of them in private conversation that a lady customer driving an auto or a horse in an effort to approach their stores should not have to dodge or climb over several autos that somebody has left there early in the day and forgotten to take away. It is quite a problem.

Change in the Plaza Grocery

J. E. Weaver has sold a half interest in the Plaza grocery to J. H. Hearsey. The new partner has taken possession and will devote his entire attention to the business. The increase in volume of business since Mr. Weaver has had the Plaza has made it necessary to secure assistance in the store.

Mr. Hearsey is well known to Ashland citizens and his connection with this popular priced store will be good news to his friends.

Several Changes

In Business

Three changes in business firms took place today, indicating renewed confidence in Ashland's future. J. E. Weaver has taken as a partner in the Plaza grocery J. H. Hearsey. E. W. Lyman has sold his billiard parlor and cigar store to N. Natstead and H. A. Gray. Mr. Fuller has disposed of his interest in the Fuller & Paulsen tailoring shop to Carl Hilty.

In addition to these changes in business several deals have been closed in the last few days for residence property, but they have not been made public.
