WHEN EGGPLANT IS USED.

THIS wholesome vegetable may be prepared in a variety of ways. Fried eggplant is the average housewife's standby. There are, however, many persons who do not like fried eggplant who would possibly eat it served in some other way. Try some of the following methods and see if this may not be so:
Eggplant Fritters.—Boil eggplant in water with a tablespoonful of lemon juice or vinegar, then wash and drain. To a pint of eggplant add two beaten eggs, a half cupful of flour and salt and pepper to taste. Form into cakes and brown on both sides in hot fat.

A Dainty Dish.

Escaloped Eggplant.—The eggplant is combined with tomato in slices and baked escaloped, with oil instead of milk and with other additions to taste, or the cooked pulp, finely broken, is combined with grated breadcrumbs, well seasoned with a little bit of cream and finally a well beaten egg. It must only be heated through in the oven and not dried. No matter how eggplant is cooked it must not be too dry, although we cook it to dry it somewhat.

Baked Stuffed Eggplant.—An eggplant will taste better and give more nutriment baked than fried. Cut eggplant in half lengthwise. Scoop out, leaving a quarter inch shell. Chop up the eggplant and add equal parts chopped ham and toasted breadcrumbs. Add salt, pepper and butter or bacon dripping. Stuff each shell, rounding it over on top. Sprinkle with cracker crumbs. Add a dab of butter and bake.

Deliciously Flavored.

Eggplant With Sauce.—Peel and cut the eggplant into dice, place in salted water for one hour, drain; then cook until tender, but not soft. Chop finely a medium sized onion and cook until delicately colored in two tablespoonfuls of butter, blend in one and one-half tablespoonfuls of flour, add gradually one pint of well seasoned stock, stir until smooth and creamy, season with pepper and salt, strain over the prepared eggplant, cook gently for ten minutes and sprinkle with chopped parsley before serving.

Pan Fried.—The easiest and quickest way to prepare the eggplant is to fry or saute it in a pan with a little butter or oil. Cut the eggplant into one-third inch slices, season with salt and pepper which has been mixed together and then fry in a little oil or butter until soft. It also may be rolled in flour and fried in this way or even dipped in eggs and crumbs. Seasoned with salt and pepper only and then fried with tomatoes, which are served on the slice of eggplant, it is very good.

NEED OF FAT AS FOOD.

No Difference to the System From What Source It is Obtained. The trees in a Syrian garden are an important and practically necessary part of the nutrition of the people. Combined with grain in the form of coarse bread, the tree products make a balanced and wholesome ration. For large elements of the population, at least one meal a day is commonly composed of bread and walnuts. The walnut is rich in both protein and fat, so that this combination virtually duplicates in nutrition our occidental sandwich of bread, butter and meat.

The oil to which the scriptural writers so lovingly referred is still important in that land, and the olive tree that produces it is almost as useful to the Syrian as the cow is to the American. The cow gives butter and milk, and the olive tree gives butter and food. When the workman on the Mediterranean goes home for a day's labor, he often takes a pocketful of olives and a piece of bread for his lunch. Remove butter, breakfast bacon and fat meat from our vocabulary, put olive oil in their place and we shall begin to think the thoughts of Mediterranean cooks.

Once cooks and palates are educated, the blood does not know the difference between the rich globules of fat that come to it. It is fat that the human system wants, and it makes no final difference whether it comes from butter, bacon, lard, olive, coconut, goose or bear. Fat is fat, once it is in our blood. The source from which we shall get this fundamental of nutrition depends in part upon our bringing up, but eventually our getting it depends upon the ease of winning it from our environment.—Atlantic Monthly.

HOW TURNER FIRED A GUN.

An Impromptu Effect That Startled His Fellow Artists.

Turner's impromptu effects were at times consternating to his fellow painters. Mr. Randall Davies, quoting from Leslie, gives in "Six Centuries of Painting" Constable's experience in 1839, when he exhibited his "Opening of Waterloo Bridge." It was placed beside a gray sea piece, by Turner, which lacked all positive color.

"Constable's picture seemed as if painted with liquid gold and silver, and Turner came several times while he was heightening with vermilion and lake the decorations and flags of the city barges. Turner stood behind him looking from the 'Waterloo Bridge' to his own picture, and at last brought his palette from the great room where he was touching another picture, and, putting a round dab of red lead, somewhat bigger than a shilling, on his gray sea, went away without saying a word. The intensity of his red lead, made more vivid by the coolness of his picture, caused even the vermilion and lake of Constable to look weak. 'He has been here,' said Constable, 'and fired a gun.' On the opposite wall was a picture by Jones of 'Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego in the Furnace.' A coal, said Cooper, has bounced across the room from Jones' picture and set fire to Turner's sea."

Next time Turner came in he glazed the scarlet sea and shaped it into a buoy.

Glazed Earthenware.

Glazed earthenware was long supposed to be of no more ancient date than the ninth century, but the discovery of glazed ware in Egypt, of glazed bricks in the ruins of Babylon, of glazed coffins and enameled tiles in other ancient cities proves that this is not the case. The Arabs seem to be entitled to the credit of having introduced glazed ware into modern Europe. The Italians are said to have become acquainted with this kind of ware as it was manufactured in the island of Majorca and gave it the name of majolica. The French derived their first knowledge from the Italian manufactory at Faenza and christened it falience.—London Saturday Review.

Liszt's Rude Host.

High society has its crude personalities. If a story in one of the magazines is true. At a dinner given to the famous pianist, Liszt, his host, Count Ludolf, right in the middle of Liszt's most exquisite playing, said in a loud voice, "If any one wishes to have a game of whist there are tables in the other room." Liszt, says the narrator, stopped short, but as no one moved he consented amiably to remain at the piano. The amount of wine that had been consumed by Liszt's host on this occasion is not stated.

To Test Bread Dough.

To test light bread dough and make sure as to whether it has risen sufficiently for baking, press the finger in the dough. If the hole remains the dough is in proper condition. If the dough rises and fills the indentation this shows that it is in a condition to continue rising.—Exchange.

If It Must Be.

After a thorough examination, the physician remarked: "What you need, my dear sir, is an operation."

"Very well," replied the patient resignedly. "Which operation are you cleverest at?"—New York Post.

A TRAGIC EXPERIMENT.

How a Husband Tried to Cure His Wife's Fear of Pythons.

Concerning pythons, the following is a true story: A young lady in England for a long time resisted her lover's entreaties to go out to India with him as his wife. She had a horror of the wild animals she believed she might encounter there, especially serpents. At length, however, after he had issued a sort of ultimatum, she consented to accompany him. She did not, however, leave her fears behind her and lived in constant terror of some day meeting what she so intensely feared. Her husband did his best to laugh her fears away, but without avail. Then he resolved to try more drastic means.

A huge python was killed in the neighborhood of his bungalow. Without telling his wife anything about it he ordered the reptile to be brought into the drawing room and coiled up as if asleep on the hearth rug. Then he went out and called his wife, telling her to go into the drawing room and that he would join her in a few minutes. Soon after he heard a dreadful scream. "That will cure her of her fear of serpents," he smiled to himself and purposely delayed his entry. When at last he went into the drawing room he saw his wife lying dead on the floor, and coiled around her was another huge python, the mate to the one that lay dead on the hearth rug.—St. James' Gazette.
