Allen H. Eaton of Portland, who is a candidate for speaker of the house, complains that the claim of Ben Selling that he has enough votes pledged to elect him is not true, but that the Portland papers have closed their columns against him in the interest of Selling. He says that Mr. Selling is not at all assured of election, but on the contrary he has a splendid chance of election.

Those Navajo Mackinaws came from Enders'. They have one for you.

Election, especially in regard to the candidates for recorder, is calling forth much discussion on the street corners. Quite a few dollars have already been put up by various people on the outcome of the voting tomorrow, and there are bound to be some rueful faces when the returns come in.

The Misses Amelia and Emma Furer, who have been visiting with their sister, Mrs. E. E. Bagley, for the past year, left last week for San Diego. From that place they will proceed to their home in Boston, Mass. During their stay here the two won a high place in Ashland's social affairs.

On the basis of personal friendship the Tidings editor would hardly be able to choose between Mr. Hedges, Mr. Croxall and Mr. Ware. They are all good friends of the editor. But in exercising judgment for a city officer principles higher than personal regard should determine the issue. That is, the particular fitness of the candidate for the place to which he aspires. In view of this fact the Tidings supports Mr. Ware purely on his superior experience in such matters and his ability to thoroughly systematize the office so that the business of the people not only may be known at any minute, but to the important end of economy in handling it. And in doing that we realize that any judgment as to fitness is only a matter of opinion unless each of the candidates had been actually tried in the place and some had been found wanting. We feel absolute confidence that Mr. Ware, when tried, will be found to fill the niche exactly and as near perfectly as can reasonably be expected.
