Riflemen May Go to Florida

Several of the boys of the local militia are trying hard to get to be expert enough riflemen to win out in the Clackamas trout, which will determine the team of riflemen to go from Oregon to attend the National rifle meet at Jacksonville, Florida, which is to be held from October 15 to 22.

Every Sunday many are to be seen at the local rifle range practicing. At present Dobbin Irwin stands highest for marksmanship and Adams, Porter, Hatfield, Diebert, Prescott and Butterfield are close on his heels. Irwin, Adams, Porter and Hatfield have already received medals for being expert riflemen, while Prescott has received one entitling him to the name of sharpshooter.

The state preliminary tryout will be held at the Clackamas range September 9, 10 and 11, where 200 or 300 men will compete to be chosen as one of the team of twelve to be sent from this state.

A team of four with one alternate will be sent from here to Clackamas.

Further explaining the rifle meet, the following article is given below: "Adjutant-General G. A. White of Siemantel, and Mrs. Ellis Nell. After the party a luncheon was served.

Charivari Party Entertained.

Klamath Falls Herald: A charivari party which waited on Mr. and Mrs. Earl B. Veghte of this city was entertained last night at the new home of the bride and groom at their residence on Third street. The boys took several musical instruments along, including a circular saw and electrical appliances, and following the usual reception, were treated to a spread on the lawn. The remainder of the evening was spent with music and singing. Mrs. Veghte was formerly Miss Dora M. Greibe of Yreka, where they were married August 18. They will be at home after September 1.

Among those that were at the train were the Misses Ruth Turner, Ruby Palmer, Cherry Starkey, Hortense Winter, Margaret Siemantel, Nellie Briggs, and the Mesdames Piegall, McDaniel, Eggleston, and the Messrs. Roy McDaniel, John Enders, Andy McCallen, Delbert Jones and Billie Briggs.

Dr. J. Lawrence Hill On Crater Lake

Oregon has many places of interest—places of surpassing beauty and grandeur, places worthy of the song of poets and the dream of artists, but Crater Lake excels them all. This is the testimony of all who have visited it. To the geologist it affords food for thought, for careful study and research, and to those who love the wild and weird in nature it is entrancing, bewildering and transcendently grand. It allures. It charms. It intoxicates with its splendors of colors and light and fitful clouds. Grateful, indeed, am I that I availed myself of the opportunity of visiting it a few days ago. I am in a more spiritual mood than ever before, and would not like to have died without beholding it with my bodily eyes. In the words of Zachariah, when he saw the child Jesus, I can truly say: "Now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, for mine eyes have seen the glory."

Casts Mystic Spell.

What I saw will never fade from my memory. It haunts me. It thrills me even now. It has cast a spell over me which the passing years can never obliterate. It has always appeared strange to me that so few Americans who love to travel, and have the means with which to bring the best of all lands and seas within their grasp, have spent their time and their millions abroad, and paid dearly, not counting the sacrifices and inconveniences they have had to make, for seeing what can be duplicated and surpassed in any state of the Union. There are beauty spots within reach of us all which surpass anything abroad.

"See America First" is now the slogan, and it is to be hoped that it will be heeded by all, as no country under the sun affords more beauty of mountains, of cascades, of torrent streams and canyons, lakes and rivers, of forests, where the proud cedars clap their hands, and of landscapes ravishing and prodigal in their regal and virgin splendor.

Description of Lake.

Crater Lake, as stated in the official map issued by the department of the interior, is one of the most attractive geologic fields in the world, and to those in search of great natural wonders it is especially inviting. Lying in the summit of the Cascade range, about midway between Mount Shasta and Mount Hood, it is remarkable for its position and size, but more specially on account of its beauty, depth, the grandeur of its encircling cliffs, and its geologic history. Although there are thousands of craters in this country, there is but one great caldera, and that contains Crater Lake. This map is worthy of careful study.

The lake is nearly circular and between five and six miles in diameter, and its deepest soundings reach a depth of more than 5,000 feet. It has no outlet nor inlet. It nestles as a jewel of Divine setting in the bosom of a volcanic mountain which erupted during the glacial period. Its altitude is between 6,000 and 7,000 feet, and is completely girdled by a bold escarpment that ranges from 500 to nearly 2,500 feet, forming a picture which in beauty and grandeur is rarely equaled.

Should Be Tourist Mecca.

Any other state would advertise to the skies its wild, matchless, awful grandeur, its unparalleled castellated rocks and pinnacles. It should be the mecca of the world for both scientist, tourist and lovers of the grand and indescribable in nature. It has a beauty all its own, and the light that falls upon it falls not on sea and land.

I have been privileged to gaze upon some of the most wonderful and beautiful lakes in all lands, but never privileged, and privilege it was, to behold such marvelous combination of colors, such weird shapes and the 1913 meeting and consequently will be placed in class A. "There will be held national individual matches and the national pistol match. Oregon will have entries in all these three shoots."

forms, such a panorama of Divine chisellings, such colossal upheavals, such ramifications of laws mysterious, such silences, such lessons of the littleness of man, as I sat for hours looking into its depths and drinking in its beauties.

In Presence of God.

Because its setting is not beneath an Italian sky, nor found among the snow-capped mountains of Switzerland, nor among the classic hills of Greece, nor far removed from the haunts of man, its appalling loveliness, its matchless beauty is unheralded and unsung. As in silence I gazed into its waters of deep blue and green and purple and gold and looked upon its ribbed and fire-torn and storm-swept walls I felt myself, as never before, in the august presence of God, and realized that the ground on which I stood was holy ground. The trip to the lake in itself is as picturesque and grand as any on this continent, and is a splendid prelude to the greater beauties awaiting the tourist when for the first time the full grandeur of the lake bursts upon his gaze.

The road to the lake, specially after leaving Prospect, needs improving, and must be quickly and permanently improved before the lake can become popular and patronized as it should be. But already improvements in this direction are being made, and in the near future, it is predicted, the roads from Medford to Crater Lake will be among the best of the state. Let us all work for this end.

Traffic Increasing.

Every year traffic to the lake has increased and from now on no trip west of the Rockies will be complete without a visit to this gem of the mountains. Considering conditions—conditions which can neither be modified nor overcome—the accommodations at the lake are all that can be desired, and the menu at the hotel as good and plentiful as any to be found at such places, and at charges within the reach of all.

The genial landlord of the lodge, Mr. Parkhurst, is most painstaking in his efforts to make a short of long stay of his guests as profitable and entertaining as it is possible to make it, and, as the result, one leaves with a pleasurable feeling, and the regret that more time and study and reflection could not have been given to one of God's greatest masterpieces.

A Splendid Peroration.

No tongue, no matter how inspired, can fully describe this lake and its weird surroundings. On the canvas of Divine thought no picture is fairer and none more fascinating. Of all His works, Crater Lake will ever stand out as among the grandest and most mysterious of all that bear the stamp of His handiwork.

I can not find words better with which to close this article than the splendid peroration in John Temple Graves' description of the Grand Canon of the Colorado, in Cosmopolitan for September:

"No pen or tongue has ever done justice to this matchless peroration of the universe.

"Put away words! There is nothing to do before this unspeakable
