Company Plans For Call on July 15

The exact date upon which the 1st company, Oregon Coast Artillery, will be called is not known, but the company men are laying their plans with the expectation of a call on July 15. When they are called they will mobilize at the armory in Ashland, where they will remain for possibly ten days or longer. When the call for state mobilization comes the twelve Coast Artillery companies will be transmitted to Fort Stevens. The date for draft has not been set and the officers of the Coast Artillery know no more about the date than the men, but it is expected that the Gregon Coast Artillery will be mustered into the federal service soon after state mobilization takes place. Where they will be taken then is un-

Destination Unknown.

Just where the local company will land up and in what branch of service is unknown. The officers at the recent meeting at Portland, from which First Lieutenant Don M. Spencer returned Monday, were of the consensus of opinion on one question, deciding that there was no possibility of the company being converted into field artillery to handle the light field guns. If it is sent to France as artillery the Ashland boys will man big 12, 14 or 16 inch guns similar to the ones used for coast defense. These guns are ured on the battlefront to batter down the secondary lines of defense.

There is also a chance that the Coast Artillery will be converted into infantry.

Lieutenant Spencer says that the meeting at Portland resulted in a good many revelations, chief among which was that this war and the training which the Ashland company must undergo is entierly different from anything of the past. He says during the meeting the sessions lasted from 7 a. m. to 1 a. m. and that it was something new every minute.

Adjutant White stated that the winning of the war depended upon three things: The heavy artillery, the aeroplane and the bayonet. Rifle markmanship is becoming a necessity of the past, and in fact there are two full regiments on the French front armed with nothing but hardwood clubs.

The hoys of the local company are Early Arrivals "rarin' to go," and with the spirit which makes real Uncle Sam's soldiers are ready for whatever work the powers that be designate. With the possibility of being sent to the battlefront within a year, the work sands of visitors having already arhas taken on a new seriousness and rived to remain for the celebration. the 1st company men are throwing Eight automobiles brought a big delethemselves into it heart and soul. gation from Condon, eastern Oregon, Captain Malone will be here within and like delegations are coming from a week to assume command of the every community far and near.
