Athletics Fit Men For Life In Army

O. A. C., Corvallis, Nov. 7.—Better bodies for all young men and physical fitness for the strain of military hardships and the big inter-collegiate games are the aims of the athletics required of students here.

The big and over-developed huskies that need no "building" are no longer grabbed up on their first appearance on the campus and given the "too-much" treatment necessary to "win the games." Instead, every man is given a special examination to find out what he most needs and then the kind of drill that develops it, and assigned to play with his colleagues the games he likes and needs. If defective in bodily vigor he is given special corrective exercises.
