KLAMATH FISHING IS TO BE PROTECTED

In order to protect the fishing interests of Klamath county, the fish and game commission of Oregon have decided to close for the present certain points in the county that have hitherto been open to anglers, says the Klamath Falls Herald.

The new order becomes effective Feb. 15 and includes the following: Four Mile lake and Four Mile creek to a point one half mile below its outlet; Klamath river from a point 800 feet below its confluence with Spencer creek to a point 200 feet above said confluence and on Spencer creek from its confluence with Klamath river to a point where a pipe line diverts the water to the Spencer creek hatchery; Seven Mile creek in the Wood river country from its confluence with the Wood canal to a point where Short creek flows into it.

A notice just received from the fish and game commission indicates that those violating the new restriction will be subjected to the penalties of the law. This new order, which is taken to protect the fish at spawning time, is made this year much earlier than usual, owing to the warm winter season, according to Charles F. Stone, fish and game commissioner, who has just returned from a meeting with the board. The warm weather has caused the fish to go up the streams much earlier than usual.

Stone declares that the state department will be dependent on Klamath county this year for supplying trout eggs to the whole state. Three men will be employed to help transport the eggs, which are to be taken from Spencer creek, Seven Mile creek, Four Mile lake and Sprague river.

Studies at the forest products laboratory at Madison, Wis., have shown that Engelmann spruce treated by the sulphite process gives a pulp that compares favorably in color and strength with that of white spruce.
