WHAT GERMAN RULE MEANS TO A CONQUERED LAND

Washington, D. C.—The systematic exploitation of Belgium by the Germans under the so-called "Rathenau plan" is revealed for the first time to the American people in the latest publication of the committee on public information, just issued, entitled "German Treatment of Conquered Territory." It is based upon unpublished reports to our department of state, and other sources as yet little known in this country, and presents an appalling record of calculated German greed and brutality. Much of the most damning evidence is derived from the official orders and other utterances of the Germans themselves. The Rathenau plan was suggested early in August, 1914, by Dr. Walter Rathenau, president of the General Electric company of Germany. It consisted essentially in the formation under his direction of a bureau to procure an unfailing supply of essential raw materials for the war, such as rubber, saltpetre, metals, etc., both by purchase in neutral markets and by seizure in occupied territories. Secretly a more distant purpose was pursued. "The plan aimed not merely at making war support war by contributions and requisitions forced from the conquered peoples. It also sought to destroy the industries among the subject peoples so that it might not be possible to build them again for some years, if at all. In the meantime, the German authorities counted upon their ability to capture the markets of the world for their own wares."

As an example of the deliberate crushing of Belgian competition the case of the glass industry is cited. This was one of the most flourishing industries of Belgium before the war, and German glass manufacturers could not compete with it in the export trade. In the words of the head of the German organization of glass manufacturers, "It became vital to the German manufacturers of glass-ware that the Belgian manufacturers should be stopped from going to neutral markets." Accordingly, the German administration in Belgium was appealed to, and it promulgated "an order stopping importation, transit, and exportation" of these goods. Seizure of Belgian trade secrets was another feature of this typically German plan.

The extent to which Belgium has been denuded of its wealth, war materials, machinery, means of transport and man power under this iniquitous plan is almost unbelievable. "All crude materials indispensable for Belgian industries," reported Brand Whitlock, our minister to Belgium, as early as August 2, 1915, "were requisitioned and sent to Germany—leather, hides, copper, wool, flax, etc. Furthermore, if not the entire stock, at least the greatest number possible of machinery parts were shipped to Germany, to be used according to German statements, in making munitions which Belgian factories had refused to produce." Belgian draft horses, the best in the world, were seized and sent to Germany to be sold to German farmers. A long list compiled from the German official ordinances is given of the articles seized in Belgium. It comprises some 300 separate items, listed under such headings as minerals and metals, chemicals, machinery, food, clothing, textiles, household articles, metal products for industrial establishments, medical supplies, etc. The articles range from tungsten steel to ground slag, from electric condensers and conductors to printer's ink and matrices, from all grains for breadmaking to oat straw, from bath tubs to stair carpet rods and door knobs, from old rags to the skins, horns, feet, bones and carcasses of horses, calves, goats, rabbits and dogs. "Nothing apparently is overlooked or forgotten in this ruthless robbery of the quivering victim. It is German efficiency joined to German unscrupulousness and disregard of all rights on the part of those not able to defend themselves. Other chapters in this publication, which may be obtained free by writing to 8 Jackson Place, Washington, D. C., are devoted to pillage and arson as practiced by German officers and troops; to the deliberate burning of the rich city of Louvain on the false charge that the citizens had fired on German troops; and to the wanton destruction of houses, orchards, and every work of man carried out last spring in northern France when Hindenburg was forced to fall back from the region of the Somme.

Prof. Dana C. Munro, of Princeton university, is compiler, assisted by Geo. C. Sellery, of the University of Wisconsin, and August C. Krey, of the University of Minnesota. The pamphlet is part two of "German War Practices," the first part of which, by the same authors, was issued several months ago.

"In some respects the material in this part," write the authors in the introduction, "which deals with the treatment of conquered territory, seems at first of a less brutal and revolting character, as injury to property is always less serious than murder and enslavement of people. But when the treatment of conquered territory is studied carefully it is clear that the system shows itself here in an even more brutal form, because the systematic exploitation and wanton destruction would inevitably lead to starvation of the population, especially of the aged, feeble, and the children, and to the forced enslavement of the able-bodied workers. Furthermore, the results of these evils will not end with the war, but will be perpetuated. The conquered lands, even after they regain their freedom, will suffer long and grievously from the enfeeblement of the population caused by the misery during the occupation of the countries by the Germans."

HOUSING PROBLEMS IN SHIP BUILDING

Ships must be built where they can be launched in navigable water. New yards cannot all be placed in immediate proximity to large towns. Even where such towns are near, the sudden concentration of thousands of workers in new war industries creates demand for housing accommodations that requires much new building. Contractors who are expected to build a certain number of ships for the government within a short specified period find their chief difficulty in securing an efficient labor supply. Many of these shipbuilding companies cannot afford, unaided, to invest millions in providing houses for their employees. To expedite the shipbuilding it becomes necessary to meet this housing problem. The directing minds fortunately are agreed that

"If Anything Should Happen"

An old thought, you say. Yes, and a good one, if followed to its logical conclusion. "If anything should happen" are you and yours properly protected? even in war time we can afford to deal with housing questions in a civilized way. Good builders, good architects, good sanitary engineers, are to see that the new houses for workmen are comfortable, modern, and suitable for an intelligent democracy. This country of ours is not destined to be one of contrasting palaces and hovels. We are within months, rather than years, of a day when some at least of our states will ordain that no family of its citizens shall be indecently housed. This should be one of the great slogans that ought to prevail with the granting of full political rights to women. Thus the appropriation at Washington of $50,000,000 as a starter for housing certain classes of war workers may well lead to a movement throughout the land for the providing of a decent home for every household.—"Progress of the World," in April Review of Reviews.
