A Tribute

There's a quaint little lady whose praise we would sing,
And we bow at her feet as our homage we bring.
It is not for her beauty, her wealth or her ken
That she reigns like a queen in the hearts of true men,
For she sprang from the ranks of the lowly of earth,
Nor blue blood nor culture enhances her worth,
While the striking creations our lady doth wear
Would drive a modiste to the verge of despair,
But we crown her our queen with love's diadem bright,
—'Tis the Salvation Lassie we honor tonight.

We may toast the bold Spartans and Joan de Arc,
Who brested life's flood when the waters were dark,
Yet our Salvation Lassie, not heeding the chance,
Gladly poured out her soul on the shambles of France.
And many a lad in that shell-cratered land
Has felt the cool touch of her pain-healing hand,
And the fond, dotting mother, who prayed for him there,
Little dreamed that our lassie would answer her prayer,
And thousands of lads whom we proudly acclaim,
Would fight for her honor and die for her name.

'Mid the passions of men and the battle's wild crash
Her shoulders were bared to war's keen, cruel lash,
With a meekness and love that was wondrous to see,
Like the God-man she worships on far Calvary.
Ah, sweet Salvation Lassie, sweet newly crowned queen,
With your little poke bonnet and gay tambourine,
The hot, scalding tear of our gratitude starts,
You have builded a home in our warm human hearts.
You yielded your all to our cause and the right,
Your heart is pure gold and your soul spotless white.
So we bow to the wealth of your virtues, serene,
Sweet Salvation Lassie, we crown you our queen.

—Dick Posey.

The purchaser of an Oldsmobile has a distinct advantage. He may have strongly defined ideas of preference for either an eight or a six cylinder car. Yet in either case he need not relinquish the principal idea, the possession of an OLDSMOBILE.

SOLDIER'S LETTER

Mrs. A. C. Spencer,
Ashland, Oregon.

Dear Mother:

It is rather a strange fact that while today is nice and bright we haven't worked, as we are waiting to move, "Somewhere in France," also the weather is quite cold. Has been very cold lately with sharp east winds blowing and piling the snow all over, so most exposed places are bare while in hollows and about obstructions is pretty well drifted.

Last Saturday afternoon, in order to get some fresh air and exercise, I went to Reinecourt, with the ration trucks for oats. We started rather late in the evening so had to hurry to get there before the Quarter Master closed but it was a fine trip. For several miles the road crosses a rolling prairie country and thru two or three small villages. Then we entered an old town on the rim of a wooded hill, sloping down into a rather broad valley. We entered the town thru an old gateway of two round towers, with cone-shaped roofs, and an archway between them. The towers are loop-holed and doubtless many an ancient warrior has stood guard behind their posts and watched for enemies approaching along this same road.

Here we go, down a long hill. The main street, which leads to the gate of an old chateau perched on the point of a projecting spur of the mountain, overlooking the valley. The street makes an abrupt turn and follows the old wall round the chateau, then down a smooth grade into the valley and into the town of Reinecourt.

We got what we went for and had supper of French fried potatoes, steak and eggs, and quite well after dark started back. It was moon light and the snow on the ground made the world about us a fairy land. The old French houses with lighted windows, and covered with snow and surrounded by fir trees. It was worth all it has cost me and a lot more. I wish "you all" could see some of it, at its best. It got pretty snappy before we reached camp, just at taps, but I sure enjoyed the trip.

Sunday I went to Grande, a small village just north of our camp. There is a Roman ruin there that was destroyed along about 400 A. D. by the invasion of northern tribes, or by the Gauls, I do not recall which, but the job was well done. There are only some broken arches and a pile of broken stones that scarcely is more than a hill. A depression around the sides of the hill shows the lines of the outer wall from the main building. It is said there is a mosaic floor uncovered in places, but was so covered with snow we could not see that.

A part of the company is returning to Bure Les Tempeliers today and the rest of us will be going soon. Our work here is practically done and we are returning to the regiment.

EXPENSE GREATER

SINCE WAR ENDED
Altho the armistice was signed November 11, the peak load of expenditures of the United States Government was carried after that date. Expenditures for the six months to the end of February was the heaviest period. This is shown by the following table:

September	$1,557,264,285
October	1,664,862,261
November	1,935,249,309
December	2,060,975,854
January	1,982,350,949
February	1,189,913,903

This statement leads strongly to the conviction that the strongest reason why every one should subscribe to the limit for Victory loan bonds is the real need of the Government for funds. In order to pay the accumulating costs of the Treasury Department has been obliged to issue certificates of indebtedness in the amount of $300,000,000 a week. These short time notes are almost due and must be taken up with the funds realized from the sale of Victory bonds.

VICTORY LOAN CAMPAIGN OPENS

loans. He was followed by J. H. Jones, a member of the 69th regiment, C. A. C., recently returned from overseas duty, who gave a brief description of army life as witnessed by himself and other Ashland comrades who went abroad on this great adventure.

Rev. C. F. Koehler, pastor of the Presbyterian church of this city, also presented the reasons for subscribing to the Victory loan in a reasonable and lucid manner. He was followed by Hon. W. C. Hawley, representative of the First Congressional district of the state. Congressman Hawley, perhaps more than any other man in the assemblage, realizes the needs of this loan to assist in rehabilitating the returned soldiers and finding a place for them in the walks of life, of which the fortunes of war have deprived them. His descriptions of the conditions of many returned soldiers around the hospitals in Washington brought the truths home to the people in the sheltered west country more forcefully than any other methods had accomplished.

The opening of the Victory campaign was one of the most attractive demonstrations presented here, and all returned to their various duties with a broader conception of patriotism and realization of the need to respond to the country's demands than they had ever received before.

Relief is in Sight For Western Tiemen

That prices and fairer systems of purchasing ties would be restored and other grievances of western tiemen satisfactorily adjusted by the United States railroad commission, is the context of a message received from ex-Governor Oswald West by O. H. Ball, secretary of the Western Oregon Tie and Lumber association which has headquarters in Eugene, says the Guard. Mr. West was sent to Washington by a group of lumber and tie associations in this state and Washington to present their case to the heads of the railway administration. The action grew from the initiative taken by the Western Oregon Tie and Lumber association in a resolution passed at a meeting in Albany, Oregon, several weeks ago. This meeting was followed by a mass meeting of associations in Portland two weeks ago when decision to send a representative to Washington, was made.

The chief grievance of the tiemen against the purchasing system of the administration has been that agents have exercised unlimited authority in rejecting ties cut for shipment and degraded too large a percentage to a class below acceptance. The other factor in the complaints is that manufacturers have been allowed to sell their ties to only railways in their territory. An open market is asked.
