Apollos Close Chautauqua

Famous Concert Company Presents Two Programs on Last Day

There is probably no better known musical organization in the Lyceum or Chautauqua world than the Apollo Concert Company. For a dozen years this company, under the leadership of Arthur Wells, has been piling up a record of successes in every state and territory in the Union. They are to close Chautauqua this year with two smashing programs featuring the Apollophone, a specially constructed instrument, embracing the best qualities of the marimbaphone and xylophone. Their program is of infinite variety.

Chautauqua Is In Full Swing

of Canadian soldiers with whom he served. His talk Saturday evening was on the reconstruction period after the war, in which he dwelt on the various questions confronting this nation, especially the serious ones of the great unrest prevailing. This, he stated, can only be settled when the government has rounded up every bolshevik, I. W. W. and so-called good citizen who stayed at home and profited on the needs of the country while the soldiers shed their life's blood on the fields of France. Education is the great safe guard for this country, he proclaimed, and favors a national educational system. Church federation is also necessary according to this speaker, who favors less churches and more church, less services and more service.

Billy Sunday Delivered Sermon
In making his announcement address Friday night President Fuller sprang a surprise on the Chautauqua audience. As is frequently the custom the announcement of the minister to deliver the morning sermon was omitted, and the audience Friday night was in ignorance as to who would fill the position on that date. While introducing Rev. W. A. Sunday as the speaker of the evening, President Fuller stated that he would also return and preach Sunday morning.

After completing his address Mr. Sunday remarked that he did not know whether he would be able to return or not, as he was booked to speak in Eugene Saturday night. A vote resulting unanimously in favor of his return was taken, but still he hesitated. Finally he said he would have to put it up to "Ma." "Ma" had ruled him for 31 years, he stated, and what she said goes. Therefore "Ma" arose and said that they would return, so the eloquent evangelist said that settled it. They would be back.

The big auditorium was practically filled to its capacity Sunday morning, people from all over the valley availing themselves of the opportunity to hear the eloquent speaker of the day. A large choir of local singers led by Song Leader Walter Jenkins, held the opening song service, after which Rev. Billy Sunday preached a most eloquent sermon on the theme of the handwriting on the wall at the feast of Belshazzar, "Thou art weighed in the balances, and are found wanting."

In the afternoon a prelude was rendered by the Camp Lewis Military quartette, four young soldiers who appeared in their khaki uniforms and sang themselves into the hearts of the audiences. They were followed by the great inspirational lecture, "The Advantages of a Handicap," by Dr. Elliott A. Doyle, who brought out many instances of overcoming almost insurmountable handicaps which have succeeded in making many famous. Among those to which he referred were the physical handicap, the handicap of poverty and the handicap of riches. Of the latter he drew instances of barriers being overcome by determination and effort.

The evening's program consisted of a prelude by the Camp Lewis Military quartette, who delighted the audience with their pleasing renditions, and were followed by Edwin M. Whitney of Boston, possibly the greatest dramatic reader on the American stage. His reading, "Turn to the Right," was a play in which he impersonated the dozen or more characters, as vividly as tho they were presented by individual actors.

Monday Women's Day.

Monday at Chautauqua was essentially "Women's Day," as at the various sessions women appeared on the program and were the leading attractions. In the forenoon Miss R. Louise Fitch, an author of note gave a lecture in the auditorium on "Madame France." Miss Fitch had spent much time in the war stricken countries working among and caring for the refugees, and the story she related of the horrors accompanying the terrible struggle as it effected the women and children of France and Belgium were all the more vivid as they came to the audience first-hand. Miss Fitch made plain to the people here the necessity of continuing in the Red Cross work, especially sewing and knitting for the refugees. "Many people ask why is it necessary to sew for the French and Belgian women now," Miss Fitch remarked in her address. "People think now as war is over the women of those countries should be able to do their own work, provided they are given the material. How could you sew even if you have material sent you if you have no needles, no thread, no scissors with which to cut out garments?" Miss Fitch brought the scene close home when she illustrated how the people returned to what had been their homes, when not a building remained for a landmark, not even the trace of a street left to guide the people to their former residences.

In the afternoon one of the most charming entertainments was given by the recital artists, a violinist, a flutist and a pianist. These artists gave a prelude to the entertainment presented by Elsie Mae Gordon, whose impersonations were a masterpiece. Listening to her one could well imagine he was in a typical negro campmeeting, or was carried back to childhood days during her readings.

The evening's musicale by the recital artists and Mary Adel Hays, coloratura soprano, was one of the finest musical events ever presented on the local stage. Their numbers were enthusiastically received by a music loving audience, and the entertainers most graciously responded again and again to the encores. Miss Ida Tarbell, the premier journalist, followed with her lecture, "Our Nation, Its Problems and Progress." Miss Tarbell had been in France during the recent peace conference, and brought back with her many vivid impressions of this great event, which she related to her audience.
