Leading journals throughout England and Europe are giving columns to the study of our commercial methods and resources, nor are our national customs and characteristics sneered at as they used to be. We have suddenly risen to an importance and appreciation in foreign estimation such as we have never enjoyed before. Of course every intelligent observer knows the reason for this remarkable change in the world's opinion. Dewey's victory and the remarkable achievements of our army and navy in the Spanish war nearer home have opened the eyes of other nations to our power and influence as a century of normal progress would not have done. The benefits and advantages resulting and yet to result from these changed conditions are incalcuable and should more than reconcile every American citizen to the sacrifice of blood and treasure they re-

Some days ago the Astorian reproduced and commented on portions of an article taken from the Liverpool Journal of Commerce relating to the growing importance of the United states as a maritime power. The article in question was inspired by a visit to English waters of the United States training ship Saratoga, and the influential journal in which it was published complimented this country in a why that was surprising as well as gratifying to every American heart. It is strange that the papers of the Pacific coast have not noticed the article and given it the prominence in
