Holly Ranch No. 19, United Modern Vigilantes, gave a highly successful entertainment at Carruther's hall. A large number of invited friends were present. The members of the A. F. C. entertained themselves and friends with a trio of boxing bouts last night at the gymnasium rooms. The first two proved quite interesting and were closely followed by the witnesses, but the last, between Croebly and Lewis, was the chief one of the three. It was scheduled for five rounds but although it did not take the five rounds to finish it, it was all right what there was of it, and enough of it such as it was. One of the participants was not in good condition, so the end was rather precipitated.

One of the most interesting events of the theatrical season is announced for next Wednesday at Fisher's opera house in Callahan's big production of "A Romance of Coon Hollow," with the same scenery and effects used during its triumphant season at the Fourteenth Street theatre, New York.

The afternoon's program was a continuation of the morning's. Superintendent Ackerman proceeded with his discourse in the manner he had already adopted. The same attention that had previously paid him was now centered on his remarks and continued so until the close.

President Whitaker of Portland university was introduced later in the day and delivered a short address on the necessity of acquiring right habits and made plain his ideas in this regard by humorous but strong illustrations of the different manners men have with hats and kept his hearers in serious attention and laughter by turns.

The evening session at the M. E. church was introduced with a vocal solo by Mrs. J. T. Ross. Mrs. Ross sang in her usual cultured refined style and was appreciatively received by all present.

President Whitaker was the speaker of the evening and delivered a telling address upon the subject "Expansion." The word was not used in a territorial or political sense, but it was mental and inventive expansion and the subject was treated in an educated manner that evinced the close attention that must have been paid it by the speaker. He said:

"Every individual is under this influence all his life. We are in a land ever expanding in territory, in products, in patriotism, in character, in power. The age is expanding. This word is the keynote of the movements which close the 19th century."

The lecturer illustrated his topic by contrasting the work of agriculture in earlier periods and the present. Also that of commerce, teaching, and the requisites for the so-called learned professions. All these indicated not only an immense expansion of every form of life, but make imperative a larger preparation to meet these responsibilities.

"Training is essential as a lump of iron at the mine may be worth 50 cents, but made into horseshoes is worth $10.50, into knife blades, $12.50, into needles $38.50, into watch springs $235.00, so endowments can be developed, empowered to superlative efficiency."

This evening will be the 100th of the institute. At that time President Campbell of the state normal school will deliver an address on the subject, "Are Our People Being Overeducated?"

Miss Annie O'Neil of Astoria and Miss Evelyn Hembre of Skamokawa were yesterday enrolled in addition to those already mentioned.

THE INSTITUTE IS PROGRESSING

THIS WILL BE THE LAST DAY An Interesting and Instructive Lecture By President Whitaker Last Night on Expansion.

The institute met yesterday morning at 9:30, with Superintendent Ackerman in the chair. The discussion of the course of study, as begun the day previous, was resumed after a preliminary address by the superintendent.

This talk was a kindly suggestive one. He dwelt upon the necessity of administering praise to pupils. Many pupils are discouraged by withholding praise. To bring out all the good points in a student and in the end to accomplish good, substantial results, a certain amount of well-earned praise is necessary.

The teachers gave their undivided attention to the speaker, and expressed themselves as being greatly enlightened by the remarks made. After this brief but pungent address the superintendent proceeded with the course of study, as already mentioned. His address upon the subject was brought under the sub-head of "Tests for Promotion." This apparently limited subject was made so alive by illustrations and unexpected and forcible class plans that it assumed new meaning to those present.

The speaker concluded by exhorting the teachers to teach so that the pupils will be able to do their own work and by using the arithmetic class for an example gave a very lucid exposition of this theme.
