A MAN WHO WAS A MAN.

Ambrose L. Fulton leaves behind him a life full of kindly deeds, a life that has been, from the best standpoint, a success. Death has won a barren victory. It closed that life, but it cannot blot out the past.

All who knew him, and all the city knew him, speak his praise; not in the perfunctory spirit of charity we feel we owe the dead, but with true love and admiration for a man who loved his fellow men.

His was a life whose achievements are not counted by riches or position. He was a man of influence, but never sought to use that influence for self promotion.

Dr. Ambrose L. Fulton was a genial, generous, honorable gentleman and the world is better for his having lived in it.

FOR SOUND CURRENCY.

Philadelphia Times. Secretary Gage has experienced no change of heart in relation to the gold standard since he assumed the duties of his office, and he has consistently employed every legal means in his power to maintain every dollar of the currency whether of paper or silver at the gold standard. Realizing, however, that a man of different financial views at the head of the treasury department might with perfect warrant of existing law give the currency an entirely different and greatly deteriorated standard of value, Secretary Gage will in his forthcoming report try to induce congress to enact the gold standard into law, thus making its maintenance imperative.

Still believing, as he always has, that the treasury department should not supply the banking currency for the country, he will also recommend legislation permitting the establishment of banks with a capital of $25,000 in small communities, the lowest capitalization at present being $50,000. He will further advocate permitting national banks to issue currency to the full par value of the securities deposited to guarantee circulation, with a limited additional amount secured by the assets of the banks, the object being to provide an elastic currency which while thoroughly safe so far as the note holders are concerned, will expand and contract to meet the varying wants of business. After securing an enactment that will make gold the legal basis of all currency, he wants the government to go out of the banking business entirely by providing a banking system that will meet all the demands for a stable and liberal volume of paper currency.

These two essential features of the secretary's plan for giving the country a safe, stable and sufficiently elastic volume of currency are both sensible and entirely practicable if a majority of the representatives and senators in congress can be induced to enact what he will recommend. And on this score there ought to be no hesitation on the part of congress, for the conditions were never so favorable as now for placing the currency on a perfectly sound basis and regulating the business of banking which it properly belongs. There is a larger supply of gold in the United States than in any other country on the globe, and the supply is steadily enlarged by importation and new production. There is unlimited capital ready to be employed in the banking business under laws that encourage private capitalists to engage in banking.

It is to be hoped that a majority of both branches of congress will overcome all political timidity on this score during the coming session and enact sensible currency and banking laws. Congress is republican in both branches, the republican party is committed to the gold standard and a sound currency, and the president stands ready to approve any sound enactment on these two important subjects. There is no time like the present to do the right thing, and the right thing for congress to do is to carry out the forthcoming recommendations of the secretary of the treasury regarding the gold standard and a sufficient bank currency.

FORTUNATE VENTURE

A Ruined Colorado Politician Has the Best Lay-out in the Philippine Islands.

T. J. Tarsney, once adjutant general of Colorado, is the veritable King of Corregidor Island, in Manila bay. When this man was tarred and feathered at Colorado Springs in 1882 by a portion of her people, who imagined they would rectify a grievous wrong they accused him of working upon them during his conduct of the Cripple Creek campaign, none foresaw or even suspected that he would live to become a king in the Orient.

Neither did his hundreds of acquaintances throughout Colorado and Ohio, where he formerly resided, ever consider that the march of time would witness his following in the wake of an army as a sutler.

Yet this has come about. Returned volunteers declare that nothing but the worst of luck will prevent his being fully as absolute a master of an island in the Bay of Manila as is the Prince of Monaco, the autocrat of the greatest gambling resort of the world.

Tarsney had concluded to search for gold when he left Denver about two months previous to the departure of the first United States troops from San Francisco. He had been buffeted around Colorado until he was well-nigh discouraged. From the time his official term under former Governor Waite expired he had vainly sought to retrieve a law practice which he possessed previous to joining fortunes with the "Bloody Bridges" chief executive. The panic had made such efforts difficult of satisfactory results and prejudice against all men who were affiliated with the Waite regime operated against Tarsney particularly hard. He had decided to emigrate to Mexico when the Philippine war promised opportunities for venturesome fortune seekers and the Mexican project he had entertained was abandoned.

As a young man he had witnessed fortunes made by the sellers of provisions to the soldiers of the war of the rebellion and here seemed an opportunity to him.

"I am not young," he explained to an acquaintance in Denver, "but I feel that this is my last chance and I will take advantage of it."

The next day Tarsney was off for San Francisco. The Colorado boys found him there ready to serve them. He charged exorbitant prices for goods, but what else is a sutler for? That was what he went into the field to do. Four miles from shore in Manila bay there is an island called Corregidor. It is the only spot in the entire region where immunity from mosquitoes is almost perfect. There is a comparative freedom also from the malarial conditions which beset the main portion of the Philippines, and altogether the spot affords an ideal location for a resort for the sick and the wealthy who can afford to pay for the comforts of luxurious surroundings.

"This is what I want," said the prospector. He secured a concession from the authorities to erect on Corregidor as large and commodious retreat as his funds would provide and obtained also exclusive rights for such business. How legal these are the returned Colorado boys do not profess to know, but they declare that his project is one of the best any American has instituted. It meets a long-felt want of the Manilaites, who patronize it to its capacity for accommodations and Tarsney's place is becoming the most noted in all the country.

Tarsney is now in the United States enlisting capital to develop his island institution. His scheme includes the erection of a mammoth hotel on the island, to be conducted upon the most approved American plans and the establishment of all the accessories thereto that are usually found at the most famous resorts of the world.

Liquid Air in Surgery. Liquid air is doing wonders in medicine and surgery. It cures eczema, warts, bunions, boils, ringworms, ivy poisoning and ulcers; warms scalds, facial neuralgia and toothache; deadens the germs of typhoid, anthrax and diphtheria; renders operations painless; in part supplants the knife in surgery.

Speaking in the medical record, Dr. A. Campbell White says: "I think there is reason to hope that we have in liquid air a therapeutic agent which will remove many otherwise obstinate superficial lesions of the body and cure some lesions which heretofore resisted all measures of treatment at our disposal, including the knife. I am firmly convinced, with the experience already had with its use, that it is a specific in the treatment of such diseases as herpes zoster (painful neuralgia, accompanied by an eruption), scabies and intercostal and facial neuralgia, affording instant and continued relief after one application over the spinal end of the affected nerve. The use of liquid air in medicine, I see, in pulmonary diseases, in the reduction of fever, etc., opens a large field, one which presents many obstacles at the very start, but much hope for the future.

Dr. White, who is known as the first New York physician to use anti-toxin, became interested. Mr. Tripler gave him the use of his laboratory and Health Commissioner Jenkins gave him the privileges of the department's hospital laboratory to test the effects of liquid air on germ life.

When the tubes were removed, after intervals of thirty, forty-five, sixty and ninety minutes, the sealed ends were broken and they were dropped in to culture tubes. The extreme cold had had no effect on them.

After these experiments a culture medium containing colonies of anthrax bacilli was dropped into a glass of liquid air and left there for an hour. The result was the same as before.

Dr. White tried the liquid on rabbits. Dipped in liquid air for some minutes, about three-quarters of the ear of a rabbit was completely frozen—so stiff that a piece of the tip was broken off without pain or hemorrhage. After 10 minutes circulation was re-established, with hemorrhage at the point where the piece was broken off. Five days later the ear began to swell, and at the end of two weeks half the frozen part had shriveled and dropped off. The rest of the ear became normal.

Dr. White began treatment of the human skin by curing ulcers of the leg. The doctor put himself on record as saying: "So many of these cases have been successfully treated with liquid air that it can be positively said that we have nothing at our disposal today which will cure ulcers so quickly, thoroughly, and with as little pain."

far as relates to their nomenclature, are peculiar. There, for instance, no one ever speaks of a "private" or an "enlisted man" in the cavalry; the latter term is never used in any arm of the Queen's service, and the former is replaced, in speaking of cavalry, by "trooper." Again the prematurely efficient youngster of fourteen in the Lancers who distinguished himself at Elandsaar by shooting three Boers with his little revolver would probably smile, perhaps be seriously annoyed, at seeing himself described, as he was, in the dispatches as a "bugler"; there are neither bugles nor buglers to blow them in a British cavalry regiment, but trumpeters and trumpets, and the distinction is not by any means merely verbal; any one with the least ear can tell the difference in sound between the "general salute" played at inspection by the snare drums and bugles of an infantry regiment and that played by the kettledrums and trumpets of a cavalry regiment, even if he does not happen to know the difference between the two regulation tunes.

But the greatest number of inaccuracies and confusions which have already appeared in dispatches have been in the regard to the titles of the commissioned officers, and the blunders are not without ample excuse. The Americans who has had the pleasure of meeting Major Blank, of Her Majesty's Blankshire Regiment, and then turns up the Blankshire Regiment in a British Army List, is likely to be somewhat surprised to find his acquaintance Blank among the captains. He (the American) will hardly be enlightened by the little "M" in italics after the name. The true explanation is that Blank is a full major in the army, but only a captain in his regiment.

In something the same way the unposted are liable to mystification by the intricacies of "local rank." To take an example, the victor of Genoa was a colonel in the army when he commanded in that engagement, but owing to the exigencies of the campaign, being appointed to the command of a division, he took the theoretical rank of command-lieutenant general. Having been promoted, he now becomes a major general in the army, and many civilians, even among the countrymen of Sir William Symonds, will be puzzled to understand how that gallant officer can have been promoted from the higher rank of lieutenant general to that of major general, which is next below it.

But the greatest and most frequent entanglements occur at the very top of the list. The commander-in-chief is a field marshal and a lord, and both dignities constitute stumbling blocks to the scribe. At once since the beginning of this African unpleasantness Lord Wolseley has been printed "General Lord Garnet Wolseley, Field Marshal Commander-in-chief." As a matter of fact, he is not Lord Garnet Wolseley, and not a general. "Lord Garnet Wolseley" could only fit a younger son of a marquis or a duke. As for "general," a captain promoted to be a major in the army may remain a captain in his own regiment, and many generals are colonels of regiments, but a major general promoted to be a lieutenant general ceases to be a major general, and a full general promoted to be field marshal ceases to be a general. So Lord Wolseley ceased to be a general more than five years ago. The difficulty in this case appears to be in understanding that field marshal is a distinct grade in the British army, just as much as captain or colonel. It is so, although there are only eight field marshals in the army all told, and two of those—the Prince of Wales and the Duke of Cambridge—princes of the royal blood.

Some Traps for the Unwary and How to Avoid Them. A weekly paper in a recent issue, speaking of some operations of the British cavalry, mentioned a "battalion of lancers." This was an unusually wide error; most Americans who read newspapers and periodicals know that neither in the British nor in any other army are cavalry regiments divided into battalions, but into squadrons, which the British army are subdivided into troops. But even for the generally well informed the current talk about Her Britannic Majesty's forces is full of verbal pitfalls.

The British, like other armies, has distinctions of rank which, at least as in a Turkish bath one can stand 160 degrees in the dry room, but far less in the steam room, because the body cannot radiate moisture so well in a wet as in a dry atmosphere.

So when subjected to this pure cold, which has never before been available to the profession, the body returns quickly to the normal state because of the rapid radiation of cold leaving rather an exhilaration than a detrimental effect, stimulating to the healthy tissues.

For remembering that there is a difference in temperature between the liquid air at 312 degrees F below zero and the human body at 86.6 F above zero of over 400 degrees of temperature it can be seen that from no other means that we have to employ could we produce such a shock to a part of the body without effect on the system.

It takes only a second or two to produce locally the most extreme cold.
