George T. Meyer, of Portland, the well-known salmon packer, who has recently returned from the Sound, says packers there will not make a dollar profit this year. "While there is some improvement in the run of fish," he said, "the pack will not equal that of last year. The fierce competition between packers is responsible for the demoralization of the packing business on the Sound, and the increased number of fish-catching appliances has scattered the fish. The packing season is about half gone, and scarcely one-third of the fall pack has been reported. The fall pack of cohoes and chums on the Sound is considered good when it reaches 150,000 cases. It will not reach this figure this year. The price of salmon is low by reason of the fierce competition between packers, who were afraid they would not get enough, was run up as high as 25 and 25 cents a fish, and in some instances as high as 60 cents by reason of the shortage of cohoes and chums. I used to get the same fish for five cents. Within the past few years I understand a uniform price of 15 cents per case has been agreed upon. The fishermen would have been satisfied with that price from the commencement of the season, but naturally did not object to the fancy figures some of the packers were willing to pay."

HORRIBLE TRAGEDY. Al S. Kitemeyer Three Times Shot and Thus Kills William Lunrutt, His Own Step-father.

As the result of a long-standing family feud, William Lunrutt, a Russian farmer of Seaside, was shot and killed by his stepson, Al Kitemeyer, at 7 o'clock Thursday night, says the Telegram. Three shots were fired, and the old man died almost instantly. Kitemeyer gave himself up to the authorities this morning, claiming that he acted in self-defense. The stories of the three witnesses, who are also in custody, differ materially. The men were held before the grand jury, which is making a searching investigation of the case. According to one eye witness, the crime was a most dastardly one. Kitemeyer reloading his gun, he had fired two shots, and then shooting his victim again. Coroner Rand will hold an inquest this afternoon at 4 o'clock.

William Layfield, one of the four men who were shot before the grand jury, which is making a searching investigation of the case. According to one eye witness, the crime was a most dastardly one. Kitemeyer reloading his gun, he had fired two shots, and then shooting his victim again. Coroner Rand will hold an inquest this afternoon at 4 o'clock.

Lunrutt then put back the gun. As he did so, witness says Kitemeyer grabbed a shot from one of the men who were with him. Lunrutt started to run and Kitemeyer raised the gun to his shoulder and fired. "Don't shoot! Don't shoot!" Lunrutt said, throwing up his hands. "Don't shoot me any more."

Kitemeyer coolly shoved in another shell, according to Layfield, while the old man continued to run in a half circle as though dazed. The man with the shotgun fired again. Then he put in another shell and fired a third time. At the third shot Lunrutt dropped. The Epperson boys were with Kitemeyer, and their story is opposite to that of Layfield, who accompanied Lunrutt across the field. One of the Epperson boys says he and Lunrutt were crossing some of Kitemeyer's field about 7 o'clock, going home from work, and that because of threatening words on the part of Kitemeyer, Lunrutt made a move as if to pull a gun, and that Kitemeyer took a run from H. Epperson and shot him.

BAD ACCIDENT.

Fifty-five Men Thrown Out of Employment by an Engine Flung Away in Saldern's Logging Camp on Grays River.

The Grays river steamer yesterday afternoon brought L. Saldern and about forty of the men from his logging camp on Grays river to this city, where the men were paid off last evening. The men, together with about fifteen others, were thrown out of employment for six weeks and perhaps for two months by the running away of a train load of logs at the big logging camp.

Mr. Saldern was seen by an Astorian reporter last evening at the Parker House and gave an account of how the accident occurred. It seems that a new branch of track had been laid on a rather sharp grade a distance of about a quarter of mile. New rails were laid and the train had passed over this section several times. On Thursday afternoon the train consisting of an almost new Climax engine, built especially for the purpose, and three sections loaded with about 15,000 feet of logs started down the grade. On board the engine with the driver was Mr. Charles Hartner, the capitalist of Hon. N. Y., owner of the tract of timber on which the camp is located, who had been in camp a few days looking the ground over. Shortly after the train got under way it was discovered that on account of the newness of the rails, the sand had no effect and soon the train was beyond control. The engine advised Mr. Hartner to jump, which he did, picking out a soft spot in the mud, and escaping serious injury. The engine then reversed her engine and followed his example, also landing safely. The train ran down the hill at a terrific rate up the grade below, with no apparent slackening of her speed and shot through an oak switch, arranged for the convenience of switching the engine on to the rear of the train and usually left open for just such an emergency as the present. The train rushed along the short length of track till the trucks struck a stump at the end and the boiler and upper works of the engine were hurled on over into the ravine below. The cars were quite badly damaged and the engine was pretty near a wreck.

Mr. Saldern says it will be probably two months before things can be gotten to shape to resume operations. He says the actual loss to the engine and train will amount to several thousand dollars besides the loss of time in operation, but that he is very thankful that no one was hurt.

It was indeed a fortunate circumstance that no one was injured, for on the preceding trip down there had been two ladies and a child on the engine, and had they been on when the runaway occurred it would have been practically impossible to have rescued them and death must have been inevitable.
