FRIGHTENED DEMOCRATS.

The recent reply of Mr. Bryan to an address by the president of the Minnesota Colored Men's League expressing confidence in the principles and purposes of the leader of the Democracy has awakened much hysterical comment in the South among old-line Democrats.

"If by the suffrage of my countrymen I become president of the United States, you may rest assured that the rights of a citizen of this country, regardless of color, creed or condition, will be protected as far as the executive has power to protect them."

When to this utterance is added the recent statement of Chairman J. K. Jones that he thinks "it an insult to them to consider the citizenship of colored men a thing apart from the body politic," the heartrending agonies which consequently make existence a continual torment to the Southern Democrat can be appreciated.

"What he says can have but one meaning. There is no explaining it away, except to declare that he did not say it. We all know where Mr. Bryan stands on the currency question and on the question of imperialism, so far as the latter relates to distant island acquisitions, but this leaves us in some doubt as to where he stands in regard to the determination of the white South to govern its own without the consent or participation of the black South."

The Memphis Scimitar takes this hopeless view of the situation: "Among the 'rights' guaranteed to the negro by the Fourteenth amendment to the constitution is the right to vote and hold office equally with the white man. In case of his election, therefore, Mr. Bryan will stand pledged to protect this right to the utmost of the power is, by no means, the dreadful disease it is thought to be—in the beginning. The trouble is: you don't know you've got it; you don't believe it; you won't believe it—till you are forced to. Then it is dangerous.

Don't be afraid; but attend to it quick—you can do it yourself, and at home. Take Scott's emulsion of cod-liver oil, and live carefully every way.

This is sound doctrine, whatever you may think or be told; and, if heeded, will save life. We'll send you a little to try, if you like. SCOTT & BOWNE, 405 First Street, New York.

vested in him as president. From his own words, which are too plain to be misconstrued, it follows, as the night of the day, that he condemns the measures taken in the South to annul or minimize the results of negro enfranchisement. He denounces as "race prejudice" the sentiment of Southern white people which they esteem as a God given inspiration for their own protection and the maintenance of civilization in half a dozen sovereign states."

There is no occasion for a panic, Messrs. Bryan and Jones were only playing for the negro vote and took it for granted that their little game would be better understood by the Southern Democracy. Mr. Bryan is too shrewd not to realize that the "consent of the governed" cannot now and, as long as Democracy is triumphant in the South, never can apply to the American negro. In stating that, if elected, he will do all he can for the negro "as far as the executive has power," Mr. Bryan has left himself a loophole of sufficient size to permit an easy escape from undesirable responsibilities.

THE TASK BEFORE BRYAN.

New York Tribune.

A correspondent inquires why the United States, with its wonderful resources, its vast commerce and its great population, cannot by itself, as Mr. Bryan says it can, restore and maintain a bimetallic level of prices by the free coinage of both gold and silver at the ratio of 16 to 1. He admits that in times past the dual system of measuring values failed to work, but he points out that the nations were small then and their commerce was insignificant as compared with the present day.

He goes on to argue that the situation is changed now, and that the United States, with a population of nearly eighty million, a foreign commerce of over $2,000,000,000 annually and a domestic commerce of almost untold proportions, is in a position to exert an influence in the commercial world never exerted before. Therefore, might not the result be, as Bryan predicts, the establishment of an American financial system without the aid or consent of any other nation?"

Barring the obvious reply that nothing can be restored which never existed—and successful bimetalism is not recorded in history—the answer is simple. The United States is indeed a great nation, of vast powers and resources, but the rest of the world has not been standing still while the United States has been growing. The population of the United States, large as it is, is less than one-tenth of the total population of the gold standard nations of the world; it is less than one-seventeenth the total population of the principal commercial countries of the world; the United States owns more than one-fifth of the gold money of the world; it owns nearly one-sixth of the coined silver of the world. As matters are at present, with the gold standard assured, its position is impregnable.

If an effort were made to equalize the value of silver and gold at the ratio of 16 to 1 by advancing the price of silver from its present commercial value of 64 cents an ounce, the herculean task would be presented to the United States not only of more than doubling the metal value of the $449,000,000 of coined silver in the United States and the $3,200,000,000 of coined silver in the rest of the world, but of more than doubling also the value of all the silver bullion, silver plate and utensils and silver ornaments in the world and the future output of the silver mines. The mere statement of the proposition shows its impossibility.

But, it may be urged, the equalization process would work both ways—gold would depreciate as silver advanced and the two metals would meet on middle ground. The world's supply of gold money is, in round numbers, $4,800,000,000, worth its face value. The world's supply of silver money is, on its face, $3,854,000,000, worth in gold approximately $1,900,000,000—a total for both metals of $5,750,000,000 actual value at the present commercial ratio. To equalize the value of the metal in this enormous quantity of coin money it would be necessary to reduce the value of the gold 20 per cent, or $960,000,000, and increase the value of the silver 50 per cent, or $950,000,000. This wonderful transformation, if it could be accomplished independently of the other gold and silver in the world, would reduce the world's coin money supply by 20 per cent of the face value of all the silver used in gold standard countries, for under free coinage silver coins could have no flat value from their government stamp, as they now have, but must stand on their bullion value, as all gold coins do. And, furthermore, it would take 20 per cent from the face value of all paper now redeemable in gold. This would mean contraction, and not expansion, were the changes in value to stop there. But in order to bring about practical bimetalism not only must this enormous decrease of $960,000,000 in the value of gold money and increase of $950,000,000 in the value of silver money be effected, but all the uncoined gold and silver in the world and all the future output of gold and silver mines must be equally influenced in value. Then, and then only, could gold and silver flow freely to the mints and circulate side by side. Until all this is brought about the nation will only be playing with the whirlwind. The merest tyro, if he will study the problem, will see how hopeless the task is. The only effect would be to invite silver to the mints and drive gold out of circulation, resulting actually in cheap money, temporary currency contraction, business chaos, ruined honor and a step backward in civilization which a quarter of a century might not recover.

It is exasperating to one who knows Foley's Honey and Tar, and knows what it will do, to have a dealer recommend something else "just the same" or "just as good" for colds, coughs, croup, influenza, etc. CHAS. ROGERS, Druggist.
