In 1892, under the McKinley protective tarlff. American farmers exported agricultural products valued at $798,328,232. In 1895, under the Wilson Democratic tariff, these expertations amounted to only $553,210,026. In the past fiscal year, under the Dingley tariff, agricultural products worth $835,912,952 have

The essential condition is that it shall undersell all other competitors at home and abroad." lewspapers, and definitely shown in the Republican campaign text-book, that CHAS, ROGERS, Druggist, trusts are as numerous in free-trade

The weakness of the answer is apparent at a giance. In the first place, there s the forced admission that trusts can exist with or without a tariff. In the econd place, there is the assertion that trusts in England can maintain themelves only by underselling all competiors, with the intended implication that uch is not the case in the United States. when as a matter of fact the statenent is true of both countries. The great complaint against American trusts is not that they raise prices, but that they extinguish competition by their ruin, as witness the recent colanse of the wall paper trust, which had the benefit of a 35 per cent tariff, nt which was driven to the wall by inpendent manufacturers of wall paper. The largest and most securely intrenched of our combinations is the Standard Oil Trust, which has no tariff protection. A close second is the anthracite coal trust, and there is no mport duty on anthracite coal. In sugar and tobacco there are rival combinations which defend the public against attempts to exact extortionate

The citation of these facts is not inended to have any bearing on the merits of the trust question. It is only inlended to show that the Democratic attitude toward trusts is merely a political and tactical one, having solely in view the arousing of prejudice against the protective tariff. A trust in free-trade England is only a "socalled" trust, and is harmless; while a trust in protected America is an actual agent of evil. So say the Demo-SCOTT & BOWNE, 409 Parl street, New York | cratic organs, not because of any gen-

> All this Democratic tariff-trust talk is for purely partisan purposes, and it is so transparent in motive and weak in substance that no intelligent and reanerson should be deceived a misled by it. The protective tariff is fully vindicated as a promoter of business and industrial prosperity, and the mass of the people will not be turned against it by the utterly hollow and false arguments designed to fix the responsibility for trusts upon it.
