GOOD ROADS INVALUABLE.

Prof. I. O. Barker, of the University of Illinois, a member of the American Society of Civil Engineering, has made an exhaustive study of road-building from a scientific as well as from a practical and social standpoint.

- 1.-Decrease the cost of transportation-at some seasons only a little, and at others very considerably. 2.-Give a wider choice of time of marketing crops.

In regard to the advantages of good roads, Prof. Barker says: "Too much attention has been given to the supposed direct financial advantages of good roads, to the exclusion of the social advantages."

Properly constructed roads from Astoria to the rich territory adjacent would bring to us and to the country thus tapped not only most of the advantages which Prof. Barker has named but a large share of the business which railroad lines are otherwise likely to divert to Portland.

COMMERCIAL SUPREMACY.

Tacoma Evening News. The statement of the world are absorbed in studying the one great problem of commercial supremacy. That is the paramount question of the present age, not only for merchants and manufacturers, but for the trained statesmen and diplomats of the leading governments of the earth.

"Now, Mr. President, we occupy a great position economically. We are marching on to a still greater one. You may impede it perhaps by legislation. You may check it, but you cannot stop the work of the economic forces. You cannot stop the advance of the United States. We may blunder here in legislation, which we may pass for this thing and that thing, but the American people and the economic forces which strides of the American republic. Lord Rosebery declared at Wolverhampton that the Americans were England's most formidable rivals. This view of the United States is shared by most of the leading statesmen of Europe.

Senator Lodge, of Massachusetts, made a brilliant speech in the senate on this subject recently, during the debate on the army bill. He said in part: "We have proceeded in the process of our development until we have expanded far beyond our own markets commercially, and we are breaking into every market in the world. It is a part of economic development. We are marching fast toward the economic supremacy of the world. Look at Europe and compare it with the United States."

"The control of the ocean is vital to us. That is why I have always advocated a navy—a powerful navy we must have. I wish to see our army whether it is ten thousand or twenty thousand or a hundred thousand strong, organized with the utmost skill and utmost science, so that if the hour of peril ever does come, we shall have a system which we can expand on the instant, one which will not immediately produce disaster and trouble and stumbling and hesitation as it did at the beginning of the Spanish war. Make your army large or small, as circumstances demand, but make your organization of that army the best, the most flexible, the most elastic, in the world."

underlie all are carrying us forward to the economic supremacy of the world. It is a great position, but dazzled by its splendor do not forget its perils. We look at this great development, and we all take deep pleasure in it, but it carries its dangers with it, and I want to see the United States always prepared to meet those dangers. We have no quarrel with any nation—I hope we shall have none, and I have said already that I see none that would wish to attack us—but I wish to see the United States so prepared that under these new conditions she will always be safe by sea and land.
