LONDON, April 14—British newspaper men and magazine editors are attempting at the moment to see hope against hope when the despondent mood of the South African campa gners has given room to more optimistic views. The last letter from London says the press is beginning to appeal for the French and German papers and to see the light of peace.

The last week has been marked by a new raising of hopes for a French victory in the Belgium and the Entente countries. The European press has been filled with reports of success, but the British press has been slow in joining in the celebration. The British press has been content to report the news as it comes, and the British public has been inclined to be skeptical of the claims of the British press.
