The Portland Oregonian cribs from the Spokane Spokesman-Review a list of somewhat forceful and accurately descriptive expressions used by the Post-Intelligencer in describing the Oregonian's brutal assault on Mrs. McKinley. These it seems to consider as a sort of "offset." Let us illustrate. A street-corner loafer addresses indecent remarks to a lady passing by. A friend of the lady's husband, happening to be near, chastises the wretch and probably uses his tongue as well as his boot. The castigated vagabond swears lustily. Yet the two men are scarcely on the same moral plane. That, however, is not true of the Portland and the Spokane newspapers. They are twin brothers in thought and method, and sympathy flows as natural between them as bilgewater from the lower hold to the pump. —Seattle Post-Intelligencer.

THE TRANSCONTINENTAL SETTLEMENT.

It is easy enough to read, through the guarded statements of those in a position to know all the facts, the truth about the agreement reached between the trancontinental railroad interests after their recent contest. It is important and welcome knowledge to the people of this section and this city; for it implies the carrying out of the great plans of Mr. Hill and his associates, in which Seattle is so vastly interested.

When the community of interest adjustment was concluded between the Great Northern, the Northern Pacific and the Burlington, by which all were to be operated in harmony, the Union Pacific managers took alarm. Whatever other occasion there may have been for this, they undoubtedly feared a war of rates in the territory which they share with the Burlington, and an invasion, by new construction, of other territorry to which they lay claim. They endeavored to defeat the plan by their raid on the market and their great purchases of Northern Pacific stock.

All this has accomplished nothing probably that would not have been conceded readily by the Morgan-Hill interests in the beginning. The Union Pacific and the Northern Pacific now obtain each a representation in the directory of the other. This means only a safeguard against such hostilities as have been hinted at above. It has not in any degree interfered with the consummation of the plans of Messrs. Hill and Morgan. It amounts only to a sort of safe-conduct to the Union Pacific people. Feeling themselves secure against imagined attack, they can go about their business. And the great plans projected by the great representatives of the northern systems can now be carried out without interruption. The Hill-Morgan control has never for a moment been impaired.
