SENTIMENT AND ANGER.

Milwaukee Sentinel.

The London Saturday Review, never too friendly to the United States, finds in the address of Senator Lodge and Vice-President Roosevelt at the opening of the Pan-American exposition in Buffalo fuel with which to feed the fires of its anger. It says:

"Senator Lodge we are accustomed to in the character of Bombastes Furisco, but Vice-President Roosevelt we have usually regarded as one of the pet Americans of the people that dream dreams of the entente of "the two great Anglo-Saxon nations." Mr. Roosevelt has joined Senator Lodge in defying all Europe and Great Britain to interpose their interference between the states and the overflowing affection of the one hundred and forty millions of the nineteen South American republics. This is a very pretty picture but it has about as little relation to the truth as the humanitarian processes on which the war against Spain was declared. Now the Monroe doctrine triple exaggerated and the rejection of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty are the means by which South America is to be prevented from being snatched from the loving arms of the States. But we fancy South America would prefer even the attentions of Europe to those of their friends on the North. It is pleasant for Europe to be menaced with the commercial fist and the mailed fist of America at the same time."

The Review should call to mind that this matter is not one of sentiment. The history of the world has been written with black ink on white paper, and he who reads may learn that England and the English have never been swayed by sentiment when their interests were at stake. It happens that the United States has grown commercially and politically. At the same time it happens that European nations, including England, are becoming crowded because they have grown, and they may take it into their heads to stretch across the ocean and invade this continent.

We are not disposed to entertain unfriendly feelings for the old world countries, but we prefer not to have them move into our immediate neighborhood. That is all there is of it. The menacing "commercial fist" is the inevitable result of aspiring mechanical genius on the part of American men. If the Review will read what English writers have to say on this subject its wrath may be turned to admiration. It will only be necessary to appeal to the "mailed fist"should the people on the other side attempt to overcome that genius—which is exercised in peaceful, legitimate enterprises—by force of arms.

The better way for the Review to do would be to advise Englishmen to perfect themselves in the commercial and mechanical arts to the end that they may meet American competition and advise European peoples to do likewise. There are no Asias or Africas on this side of the ocean over which the European nations may wrangle and cut each other's throats.
