THE SEATTLE TRAGEDY.

In the past Seattle has apparently gloried in the oft-bestowed reproach that it was the toughest town on the Pacific coast. With the tragedy of a an awakening and the elements that stand for good government and clean policies will probably get together and assume the reins of municipal political power. The Post-Intelligencer, which drove Meredith out of office with its charges of corruption and malfeasance to be a supporter of the Considine faction, finds in the tragedy a lesson to be thoughtfully conned. Following is reproduced an editorial from the P.-I. of Thursday;

One strong feeling underlies all the talk of the screet and all the sober thought of reflecting men in dwelling on the terrible crime that still overshadows this city. It is that this and better era. Not in vain should be the experiences through which we have passed and the awful lesson that has been set before us. And there can when the agencies of public justice are busied in attempting to apportion the blame and the responsibility than a study of what the future is to gain from the melancholy past. The time is not yet here to put into of the community and what we are convinced will be, if it is not already the calm, underlying determination of its people. But it is evident enough that the old order of things is at an end. We have run the round of the lets, 25c. fatal circle too common in American municipalities.
