

A LITTLE BIG WASTE.

DISTINGUISH between economy and wisdom. Sitting at home to save shoe-leather is economy, but it is scarcely wisdom. In the same way, doing without Ivory Soap is economy but it isn't wise; your risks are greater than all possible saving.

Owing to the heavy catches of Saturday and Sunday nights and the inability of cannerymen and the cold storage plants to handle all offered the price for fish dropped to six cents, at which figure it will probably remain. This was the price originally fixed by the Fishermen's Union, the subsequent inflation having resulted from the scarcity in the early part of the season.

For the first time during the present season the cannerymen and cold storage plants had all the fish they could handle Sunday. The run entered the river Saturday night and when the launches began to gather the night's catches they found that other crafts would have to be impressed to handle all the fish. The salmon were of good size, averaging about twenty-five pounds. Several hatchery fish marked by the removal of the adipose fin were received. The run kept up yesterday and the fishermen and cannerymen are again hopeful of a profitable season.

Wong Gok, a Chinaman aged about 35 years, employed at the Elmore cannery, was instantly killed yesterday afternoon about 5 o'clock. The man was fastening a retort door when the end of the retort next to him bulged out until the frame cracked, releasing the door with a murderous impetus. It caught Wong Gok over the left temple, tearing an ugly hole in the skull. The force of the impact hurled the unfortunate man a distance of twenty feet. Dr. Finch was immediately summoned but the injuries were fatal and death ensued within a few minutes. The deceased had been working in the cannery since the opening of the season. Deputy coroner Max Pohl took charge of the remains and removed them to the morgue. The deceased belonged to the Wong Company, and a wife living in China survives.

John Muir and family, of Los Angeles, spent yesterday in Astoria, having come down from Portland in their private car. Mr. Muir is superintendent of the division of the Southern Pacific operating in Los Angeles and has been in the employ of the company for the past thirty years. When President Hayes, the now executive head of the Southern Pacific, was wedding out his desirable officials and replacing them with men he thought more competent he paid Mr. Muir the deserved compliment of raising his salary substantially and shortly after sent him off for an extended vacation trip. Mr. Muir is recognized as one of the ablest railroad men on the Pacific coast, and the division under his supervision is the most important of the entire system, outside of the terminal city, San Francisco. Mr. Muir's car will be attached to the regular train this morning for Portland.

The salmon fishermen on Rivers Inlet, B. C. are at present having exciting experiences while fishing for sockeyes. A large shoal of blackfish—a species of what is playing about the mouth of the inlet, attracted in shore by shoals of herring. The blackfish frequently strike the salmon nets, with disastrous results to themselves, and, as occasionally happens, to the nets and sometimes to the fishermen. One night recently a schooner from Wadhams' cannery got foul of one of these undesirable fishers of the sea and was kept working all night endeavoring to get rid of it and at the same time save his net. This was a difficult and dangerous task, as one blow from the tail of one of the monsters is sufficient to smash a fishing boat into matchwood. The big animal became so involved in the net that it eventually drowned, and one of the crew members, who was taken in tow, landed on the beach at the cannery and with considerable difficulty released from the net. The whale, it is estimated, weighed fifteen tons and was thirty feet long. It was cut open and the liver extracted, this organ alone yielding six barrels of very fine oil, which will handsomely reward the fisherman for his dangerous experience. The net was an 8-40 web, in its fourth season, and although its strength was severely tested not a mesh was broken.

FRASER RIVER STRIKE.

Fishermen and Cannerymen Finally Reach an Agreement.

The special correspondent of the Victoria Colonist at Vancouver gives the following account of the strike: The fishermen's strike is over. The decision was reached at a meeting of fishermen held in the board of trade rooms tonight. The result was brought about by a committee of prominent citizens, who voluntarily acted as intermediaries. This committee consisted of Messrs. Tindall, Dearing, Kelly, S. J. D. Scott, F. Hucombs and C. N. Davidson. The way the settlement was brought about is as follows:

Mr. Dearing, when at Stevens, was asked by a large number of fishermen to try and have something done by the business men to bring the strike to an end. Mr. Dearing on his return to Vancouver called on Mr. Harry Cowan, the prominent labor unionist, and Mr. Cowan suggested the names of the committee of citizens, who were called upon to bring about a compromise. The cannery executive was visited, and the citizens' committee were told that if the offer which has now been accepted, they would have boats ready for all the white fishermen who would accept them.

The committee then got the executive of the Grand Lodge of Fishermen together, who expressed approval of the offer, and called a meeting of the Grand Lodge. Elburne, Canoe Pass, Westminster and Vancouver sent delegates, and the unions of the first three mentioned places empowered their delegates to act. The Grand Lodge favorably considered the suggestion, but the Elburne, Canoe Pass and Westminster delegates declined to exercise their power to decide for their unions unless the Vancouver lodge ratified the offer. The executive of the Grand Lodge of Fishermen met the cannery executive and the citizens' committee, Mr. Brimmer also being present as an independent labor commissioner. At the meeting both sides agreed to the suggestion made by the citizens' committee, and all that remained to be done to settle the strike was to have the offer ratified by the Vancouver lodge. At this meeting the citizens' committee and Mr. Brimmer were invited to speak. Many fishermen also addressed the open meeting, and subsequently all retired but members of the Vancouver union. A secret ballot was taken and the lodge ended the strike by declaring in favor of accepting the suggestion of the citizens' committee by a vote of 61 to 25.

By the agreement the fishermen accept 12 1/2 cents a fish for one-quarter of the entire pack put up, and ten cents for the remainder. WEST SIDE NOTES.
