AN EXCEPTIONAL CASE.

American Economist. Mr. Charles H. Schwab, the president of the United States Steel Corporation, is reported as having expressed the conviction to the Industrial Committee that a policy of concession to foreign commercial interests should be a part of our customs legislation from now on, as a preventive of united tariff wars upon our export trade.

Such, however, would be a rather hasty conclusion, as can easily be seen. Mr. Schwab may voice the deliberate judgment of the company he heads, but it is by no means clear that his views are shared by all the steel interests of the country, as they certainly are not by the leading men in other lines of manufacture.

Aside from the necessity of raising revenue the justification of the tariff is in balancing up the cheaper cost of production abroad, so that foreign manufacturers may not undersell our own in our own market.

Stories of the Hour

A SNAKE BANQUET. Odd Menu Provided for Men Who Found It Palatable.

Perhaps the most remarkable dinner ever cooked in this country was given by a gentleman in Rochester, N. Y., a few days ago, who is familiarly known to his friends as "Rattlesnake Pete." Mr. Rattlesnake Pete first intended to pay a little compliment to his friends with a specially prepared dinner of rattlesnake, served in various dishes, but becoming more and more enthusiastic over the idea, he enlarged the scope of the menu, adding watersnake stew, bold python with egg sauce, and as the piece de resistance, served a large platter of hot roasts, hot constrictor.

The following is the complete menu of the banquet: Watersnake Stew. Olives. Radishes. Cucumbers. Fried Rattlesnake, with Butter Sauce. Baked Python, Egg Sauce. Cold Turkey. Cold Tongue. Roast Box Constrictor. Rolls. Sandwiches. New Potatoes. Green Peas. Young Beets. Young Onions. Chicken Salad. Ice Cream. Fancy Cakes. Champagne. Cakes. Cigars.

The dinner was given in honor of Professor Henry Davies, of Denver, who is also a famous friend of rattlesnakes.

Eighteen guests sat down in the banquet hall. Rattlesnake Pete, whose ordinary name is Peter Gruber, proved a very genial host. He was anxious that his friends should know and appreciate snake in all its forms, but still he provided many other delicacies.

The table decorations were striking and appropriate. A big rattler, caged in glass, served as a centerpiece, and stuffed reptiles in various attitudes took the place of the usual sprays of fern and smilax. The walls of the room kept their everyday hanging of snake skins, rattlers' rattles, eases made from wranglers' skins and many other curios.

There was plenty of good, ordinary fare for the benefit of those who were not brave enough to tackle snake, for Pete wished no one to go away hungry. Very little of this ordinary food was eaten.

A generous plate of watersnake stew was put before every guest as a starter. The ordinary guests proved rather nervous at first, and made half-hearted motions with their spoons, but the two experts soon invited them with more enthusiasm.

"My dear Pete," exclaimed the professor, his face radiant with happiness and his mouth full of snake, "your watersnake is simply delicious. I have never tasted anything so hot and delicious. May I have another please?"

"Why, certainly, professor," said Pete. "Have as many as you want. I have plenty more in the room."

The guests began to eat and plates were rapidly cleared. Pete was surprised to find how good it was. As prepared by Mr. Gruber it seemed like a very good chicken.

"Better than fried legs," said one diner.

"I don't believe in anything but cold," commented another, but he was clearly mistaken.

As the dinner progressed the guests became more and more pleased with the various forms of snake offered to them. With hardly an exception they pronounced the rattlesnake excellent. The verdict of the diners was that this typically American product is the king of table snakes.

The diners were divided in opinion as to whether rattlesnake meat is more like chicken or veal. Probably it is somewhere between the two.

Professor Davies enjoyed himself hugely. He filled himself so full of snake that some of those present began to fear for his safety. With each new dish he went into new raptures.

"Lovely! exquisite! heavenly!" were some of his comments.

By the time the boiled python with egg sauce came on some of the guests had had almost enough, but Professor Davies easily polished off all python in sight. The roast box constrictor met with a similar enthusiastic reception.

Pete kept up with his guests as well as he could, while seeing that everybody's plate was well filled.

When cigars had gone around the Denver professor did tricks with the big rattler in the center of the table. He hung it watching about his neck, twisted it in knots and laying its head playfully in the palm of his hand. Then he opened his shirt and the head darted in and reared there. In a couple of minutes he carefully drew it out. Mr. Davies explained as carelessly as to consciousness by saying that he had no fear of being bitten when he was able to take his time handling a rattler. All one had to do was to use care, in order if aroused the snake will strike.

"But the rattler needs five or six inches in which to strike," said the professor. "If I hold him close to me there is no danger, for he hasn't room enough to get in his work."

There was a doubting Thomas present and the professor asked Mr. Gruber to show that the snake had deadly qualities. Thereupon the Rochester fan gently shoved a penknife between the snake's jaws, and two fangs darted out. Slight pressure forced several drops of a light greenish substance upon the tip of the knife blade.

"There is enough venom to kill a houseful of men," remarked Mr. Gruber.

It is painful to add that a few days after the dinner Mr. Gruber was bitten by the big rattler who formed the centerpiece of the table decorations and showed appreciation of the honor done him. Mr. Gruber's life hung in the balance for hours.

Mr. Davies told some experience he had had out in the Rockies hunting rattlers. He said he had been successful in his search, because he never irritated or disturbed his game more than was necessary. He told of one trip when he captured nearly sixty, without being in danger of a bite. He ran across them all in a bunch. They were sunning themselves and were lying crosswise and languidly slapping one another with their tails. He gathered them in one at a time, just as a man would put potatoes into a bushel basket, being careful not to pinch or squeeze any of them in the operation.

Rattlesnake Pete also entertained the guests with stories of his experience in the Pennsylvania oil fields. The medicinal value of rattlesnake oil was touched upon.

In the room where they were dining, said Rattlesnake Pete, his little daughter and a half dozen other sufferers from colic were cured. Around the neck of the one afflicted with the disease he placed a non-venomous snake, holding the neck of the reptile in his hand. Immediately the long, flexible body began a constant motion, very much like massage. In twenty minutes a quick movement removed the snake. This treatment is repeated daily or only occasionally, according to the severity of the case, from a dozen to twenty at thirty times. It is claimed that immediate relief is felt, that the distressing symptoms abate shortly, and that complete cure follows. Oddly enough, the doctor-snake grows ill as his patient grows better, and dies in a few weeks.

Professor Davies is about to sail for South Africa. He is on a snake-hunting expedition and his return is uncertain, but when he goes to New York state again he will revisit Rochester and another snake banquet will be served some new and luscious snake dishes.

The snake banquet will become an annual institution at Rochester in the future.

This was the outcome of an old entertainment offered to Rattlesnake Pete in Denver. In 1897 Pete made a visit to Denver. While there he was treated to a rattlesnake banquet by Davies, who in that city was brought to know all there is to know about snakes of every kind. According to Pete's account of the affair the banquet was all right, but they only had about a dozen snakes served up on the side. This treatment had formed the basis for a story many times told, the plot always being made that the host and guests of honor were the only ones who seemed to really enjoy the unusual side dish.

Pete determined to give a banquet in which snake should be more prominent. A few days ago Davies, on his way to New York, telegraphed that he would accept Pete's invitation and stop over in Rochester.

"Just wait," said Pete, gloatingly, when he read the message. "I'll give him a snake dinner that'll make him weep for joy."—Chicago American.

Viscogen for adulterating milk. St. Paul Pioneer Press. Viscogen is the latest milk adulterant discovered by the inspectors of the state dairy and food department. For some time the department kept getting samples of milk apparently far above the legal standard which, on being tested, were found to be far below. The cause was a mystery until, by a shrewd piece of detective work, the reason was discovered and a sample of viscogen was obtained.

The stuff is a syrup composed of sugar, lime and water, about the color of water, and is used chiefly to make the milk appear richer than it really is. When viscogen is placed in milk or cream the lactic acid turns the lime in the fluid into a white thick substance, which, assimilating with the milk, gives it an appearance and a taste of great richness. It is possible through its use to palm off upon consumers milk and cream far below the standard.

While viscogen is not injurious to the health its use is fraudulent and will be stopped by the dairy and food department. Viscogen is so little known that the practice among dairymen is very limited.
