EDITORIAL TRIBUTES.

His fellow citizens had confidence in the young soldier. He was advanced from honorable positions to those of greater distinction till he reached the place the highest in the political ambition of an American citizen.

He died as he lived—a true man, a loving, thoughtful husband, and ideal American. In this spirit of affection and Christianity the president of the United States laid in unconsciously, free from mental suffering—but a brief respite of life before his spirit entered the great hereafter.

We feel entirely unable to express the sorrow which tragic end has caused. It is doubtful if he will be mourned any more sincerely in his own country than in Canada. Not that in his public career he has ever shown any special friendship towards the Dominion.

William McKinley was a man of exemplary life. He stood for what is best in ideal American manhood. Never towards him pointed the finger of calumny or smirch his personality. He sustained himself during a long and eventful career, in blameless manner, living just as any mother wishes her son to live.

With pride, as with love, will he be laid in the grave. A martyr, called by death, he takes in memory a place beside the immortal Lincoln. He cannot as one who passes utterly away, for his work must abide. It is shown in a united people, in an enlarged life, in a new place in the scale in which nations are weighed.

a book is the epitaph he has written. So long as there is history he will have a place. So long as the story of noble deed is passed from generation to generation his fame will abide—Tacoma Ledger.

Greatest of all the legacies he has given us is the solemn and unspiced beauty of his death. Impertinently by the story of it live among the high traditions of the republic. Here we touch the common lot, the absolutely universal, the not in the noble's rear, where death's shadow tones yield in "the" thanks of millions yet to be, but in the homely highland he met the messenger and sent command should solid, peasant obedience in all humility of loving confidence.

William McKinley to lead. But William McKinley is one of the few immortals whose life's record will live as long as the history of this age of the world is preserved. There is hardly a searing child in this broad country who has not already learned of George Washington, the father of his country. In dim and distant ages, when the names of millions upon millions of men and woman who lived and died in this republic during the early centuries of its history shall have been forgotten, a few names will still be remembered.

Finally I tried Foley's Kidney Cure and a one-dollar bottle cured me." HART'S DRUG STORE.

PRITTON. "To have my heart's desire, O Lord, To do the deed my brain has planned, Not pass all I have planned, the fruit And bounty of the living soul of thee."

O Lord, let me the hope fulfilled, And bear, as once my mother bore, This to be done with thee, who has And art alive forevermore.

Yes, but the cost, give all thy heart, The soul, thy power, and youth to me. The whole is not enough to me. That crown upon the victor's cross, My faith, to bear the living cross, And boundless joy, my martyr blood, My bloods in field and sea and sky.

Let me, O Lord, let me my life, Give in the deed I do to thee. If it be for the living soul of thee, Let me, O Lord, let me my life, Give in the deed I do to thee. The work, the cross, the name, Are vital, for I would be one, And with a great heart give to thee My heritage of the blood.

HE TOOK DELIGHT IN KILLING. Uncommon Savagery of a Black Detective.

Charleston S. C.—The killing of "Wid" Hill, otherwise known as William Johnson, the highwayman and murderer, has caused the greatest satisfaction in the military circles here. The story of the killing was especially treated when he appeared before his firing party in the streets of this city with a bullet ball in his brain.

Johnston, who was captured by the military police, was taken to the city jail and there he was held for some time. He was then taken to the city jail and there he was held for some time.
