If Astorians do not take up with the sawmill proposition, they can rightfully consider themselves losers.

President Cleveland should be careful on his coming hunting expedition in the wilds of Colorado. There is no popular desire that the Colorado bears should solve the problem of what should be done with our ex-presidents.

laughter was recently announced, he destined to become a potential factor in affairs. By education, training and temperament he is equipped, at the age of 28, to assume the duties involved in the direction of his father's vast interests, and in a large measure he already does so.

At the public memorial services held in Astoria on Thursday, Rev. B. P. Rowland of the First Methodist church delivered an address of exceptional merit touching on the nobility of the late president. Many of his remarks are worth repeating.

It seems to me that it is permitted at this time to pay a brief tribute to the memory of a noble life. There is much to be learned from the life of this noble man and his noble wife.
