We must build mills.

Grover Cleveland is the only living ex-president of the United States. He is in excellent health and takes much outdoor exercise.

The San Francisco lawyer who declined to accept any fee for his administration of the estate of a wealthy man who died and left all his property to charity is guilty of unprofessional conduct.

The Oregonian is devoting considerable space to the subject, "How Good Bread Is Made." We would suggest that the Portland paper drop the discussion and take up the question, "How to Distinguish Bad Bread."

The Astorian owes an apology to the papers of Portland for stating that the Glenmorganshire did not draw twenty-three feet when she came down the river. The Astorian was misinformed. It is interesting to note, however, that the big carrier waited fully eleven days for the heavy tides that she might make the river trip in safety. She was in Portland harbor seventeen days, though five or six days were sufficient to give her dispatch. Thus, through the kindness of nature, the vessel was enabled to reach deep water.

For five minutes on the afternoon of the funeral of the late President McKinley this nation was at a standstill. Not a telegraphic message was sent, and in the larger cities all the electric street-cars were stopped. The New York Herald says that, supposing our population to be one individual, the aggregate period of silence and mourning would be 400,000,000 minutes, or 6,666,666 hours, or 277,777¾ days, or 39,682½ weeks. Could the aggregate time given by the entire population to its five minutes of hushed solemnity have been passed by a single individual, therefore, he would have stood in silent mourning no less than 771 years, seven months and about one week.

The department of agriculture has issued a report on the general agricultural conditions in the Pacific coast region. It says that, although the tendency for the past twenty-five years has been toward a gradual reduction in the area of individual farms and ranches, they are still of a size much larger than the average farm of the East or even of the Middle West. It is particularly true in California. Another distinctive feature, especially in the the great valley areas of California, is the use of machinery of great capacity, which means an economy of human labor, but often, also, means a waste of grain. Every effort is made to combine several operations into one. Transportation of the enormous quantity of Pacific coast wheat has been reduced to a science. A large saving is made by loading ships directly from the cars, trains being run from the wheat fields to tidewater at a very few hours' notice. In Washington and Oregon, however, the wheat is run through an elevator, where it is reached and mixed with other grades of wheat to bring it to the required standard grade, after which it is resacked and loaded on the vessels or cars for final shipment. About 27,450,000 bushels of wheat are exported annually from the Pacific coast, with a total value of about $20,000,000. Of the 2,000,000 barrels of flour annually shipped from Pacific coast ports during the past ten years, nearly one-half is cleared at San Francisco. The report says it has taken about 36,000,000 bushels of wheat to supply the foreign markets with Pacific coast wheat and flour. Of this amount California ports furnished more than twenty million bushels. Another bulletin on irrigation in California, based on investigations of experts and special agents, urges that the state should ascertain the volume of available irrigation water, define all rights to use, whether already acquired or to be acquired hereafter, and provide an efficient system of water administration. Recommendations to this end are the creation of a state board of control of waters, making unappropriated waters state property, limitation of all appropriations to actual beneficial use and attachment of all rights to waters to land irrigation.

SOME FACTS AND FIGURES.

Unquestionably, if Astorians appreciated what a truly good thing the lumber business is, there would be half a dozen large mills at the mouth of the Columbia at the present time. The great trouble with the people of this city has been due to ignorance of the situation, and it will be the aim of The Astorian to thoroughly explain matters, with the hope that the greatest resources of Clatsop county will be developed.

Astoria has a wonderful advantage over Portland as a lumbering center, yet that city has several large mills, while Astoria is unable to supply the local demand for lumber. It seems strange that Portland, handicapped as she is, should secure so many mills while Astoria, with her great advantages, secured none; but the situation is easily explained. While the people at the mouth of the Columbia have been inactive, those of Portland have been interesting local and outside capital and have succeeded in getting mills.

Since January 1 of the present year 267,000,000 feet of timber have been cut below Kalama. Figures compiled by millmen—to be exact, by M. J. Kinney and H. F. Prasl—show that the cost of towing that timber to Portland averaged 75 cents a thousand feet, while the cost of towing to Astoria would have averaged only 30 cents a thousand feet. The difference in the charge of towing then, was more than $120,000. To this loss must be added the cost of taking vessels to Portland, as well as the loss occasioned by the delay. Perhaps the total would aggregate a quarter of a million dollars.

Despite this great cost to Portland mills over the cost that would result to Astoria mills, the concerns in the metropolis continue to do business at a profit. There is likewise a reason for this condition of affairs. The lumber shipped East by the Portland mills must be of first quality, no matter what the cost. The inferior lumber is shipped to the Orient. The first-class lumber must be logged below Kalama, for the trees which grow further up the river are inferior to the timber nearer the river's mouth. Thus, the Portland millmen are enabled to do business at a profit.

There can be no question that the sawmill business is most profitable, else the Portlanders, heavily handicapped as they are, would certainly not remain in it.

The effect of the establishment of one large mill here would be wonderful so far as the city's growth and prosperity are concerned. A mill that would cut 150,000 feet of lumber daily would have a waiting market in the Orient. Would large ocean steamships, such as the Oceana, which repeatedly grounded coming down the river, go to Portland, at great additional expense, if they could load at Astoria? Could Portland millmen, who are required to pay 45 cents more a thousand feet for lumber than Astoria millmen, compete with local mills for the Oriental trade or that of the Eastern states? Competition would be out of the question except in one event—that the Portland mills be removed to Astoria. The opening of the local situation would force them to the mouth of the river, insuring the rapid growth of this city.

If Astoria is to grow, the lumber resources of the county must be developed. We must not longer "wait for Hammond," but, as Mr. Whipple points out, must help ourselves.

We must build mills.

MAUD MULLER.

(Revised Version.)

Maud Muller on a summer's day,
Set a hen in a brand new way.

(Maud, you see, was a city girl,
Trying the rural life a whirl.)

She covered a box with tinsel gray,
Lined it snugly with new mown hay.

Filled it nicely with eggs, and then
Started to look for a likely hen—

Out of the flock selected one;
And then she thought her work was done.

It would have been, but this stubborn hen
Stood up and cackled "Ka-dook!" and then

Maud Muller came, and in hurt surprise
Looked coldly into the creature's eyes.

Then did its legs to the box. "You bet,"
Said she, "I know how to make you set."

But still it stood, and worse and worse,
Shrieked forth its wrongs to the universe.

Kicked over the box with its tinsel gay,
And ignominiously flaped away.

Then a bad boy over the barnyard fence,
Tee-heed, "Say, Maud, there's a difference

'Tween hens, you know, and it is that
One says, 'Ka-dook' and one says 'Ka-dit!'"

Then Maud recalled that the ugly brute
She tried to set had said "Ka-dook!"

And ever since that heroic day,
She blushed in an embarrassed way.

To think of the bobble she made once when
She tried to set a gentleman hen!

NEW RELIGION IN OLD ASIA.

Disciples of Beha Growing Strong There as Well as in America.

Milwaukee Sentinel.

The recent advent in Wisconsin of a missionary to preach the doctrines of Babism, the new Asiatic religion, will give some interest to the following article on Babism from "The Ethnic Religions and Their Expansion," in North American Review:

Prayers are to be said three times a day. The worshiper is to turn his face toward "The Most Holy Religion," by which Acre is apparently interested. All congregational prayer is abolished, except in the case of the burial service. The Babi year, which, as we have said, contains nineteen months of nineteen days each, begins on the Persian New Year's day. The year contains 365 days in all, five intercalary days being added. Fasting from sunrise to sunset is ordained during the last month of the year.

Mendicity is prohibited in the following terms: "The most hateful of mankind before God is he who sits and begs; take hold of the robes of means, relying on God, the Cause of causes." The use of knives and forks in eating, instead of the hands, is enjoyed. Cleanliness is insisted on.

Marriage is enjoined on all. Wives who for a period of nine months have had no news of their husbands are permitted to marry again, but if they are patient it is better, "since God loves those who are patient." If quarrels arise between a man and his wife, he is not to divorce her at once, but must wait for a whole year, so that, perhaps, he may become reconciled to her. The kings of the earth are exhorted to adopt and spread the new faith. The sacred books are to be read regularly, but never so long as to cause weariness. Enemies are to be forgiven, nor most evil be met with evil.

Beha died in 1891, at the age of 77, in Acre, which town he had never been permitted to leave. He was here visited by the faithful who regarded Acre as an object of pilgrimage, and also by inquiries. He was regarded by the faithful as God Almighty himself, and the respect and reverence they paid him were unbounded. He had four sons, of whom the two eldest were Abbas Effendi and Aga Mohammad Ali.

On the death of Beha, Abbas Effendi, as the oldest son, became the spiritual head of the Behais, though it appears that his claims to the position were not admitted by all, for he found, at the first a rival in the person of a certain Aga Mirza Jan of Kashan, who had been the amanuensis of Beha. This rivalry did not, however, have any appreciable effect on the position of Abbas Effendi, who receives, at any rate from the vast majority of the Behais of today, a veneration equal to that accorded to his father.

Aga Mohammad Ali, since his father's death, has lived a life of retirement and seclusion. It is known that he was unable to approve the course adopted by his brother, Abbas Effendi, but he has always strenuously avoided an open quarrel with him, and has refused to give written answers to the large number of Babis who were anxious to know his views. His main object has been to avoid any further division in the Babi church.

In conclusion, a few words must be said in regard to the whereabouts and conditions of the Babis at the present day. It is impossible to obtain reliable statistics as to their actual numbers, but one million is probably near the mark. The majority inhabit the large towns of Persia, such as Teheran, Ispahan, Yuzd and Kerman. Persecutions are nowadays of rare occurrence, though the Babis can never feel really secure within Persian territory. Three years ago, Teheran alone was said to contain upward of ten thousand Babis, and no doubt their numbers have greatly increased in the interval. It is hard to say precisely what degree of caution they consider requisite, or to what extent they are known as Babis to the authorities and the populace in general. Certain it is that many distinguished persons are known by all to belong to no apparent inconvenience. The Babis are law-abiding citizens and ply their business on an equal footing with Musulmans. No Babi, however, who is known to be such, is allowed to enter a mosque. They have no place of worship of their own, but hold their meetings, generally after sundown, in the houses of various members of the community.

The present writer has attended many of these gatherings and has always come away deeply impressed by the simplicity, earnestness and courtesy of the Babis. At these meetings a practical example of the Babi principle of equality is to be seen. Here we find, side by side, a learned doctor, an officer, a merchant and a servant, sitting, as the Persians say, "on four knees" intent on discussing the latest news of the Babis in other parts of the world; listening to the recitation of a poem by some Babi poet, or hearing the contents of the latest 'lawh" from Acre. During the reading of these letter the strictest silence prevails, and pipes and cigarettes are for the time discarded. In Turkish and Russian territory the position of the Babis is one of comparative immunity. Askabad in Transcaspia is a very important center, and it is there perhaps that the followers of Beha enjoy the greatest freedom.

From the latest information it would appear that no less than 2000 Americans now subscribe to the new faith. The propaganda first began in 1892 at the world's congress of religions in Chicago, when a certain Babi came to the United States on business, gave a course of fifteen lectures on Mohammedanism and the various movements which had grown out of it. In the course of these "lessons" he continually referred to the teachings of the Bab, and in a short time he is said to have secured over one hundred "believers." He next proceeded to New York city, where he published his lectures. Such were the beginnings of Babism in the United States.

Of the consequent history of the movement in America it is at present hard to speak. At all events it seems that here, too, the division between Abbas Effendi and Aga Mohammad Ali has been at work, and that the first Babi missionary, Khairallah, belongs to the party of the latter. The followers of Abbas Effendi, who believes him in all sincerity and devoutness of faith to be the incarnation of God, are known as the Sabikis, or the "First," while those who deny his claims have received from their opponents the name of Nakizis, "Adversaries." The principal Babi centers in the states are as follows: Chicago, about 1000; Kenosha, Wis., from 400 to 500; New York city, about 400; Washington, Baltimore, Philadelphia; Wilmington and Bellevue, Del.; Newark, Fanwood and Hoboken, N. J.; Brooklyn and Ithaca, N. Y.; Detroit, Mich.; Boston, Cincinnati, San Francisco and Denver.

Babism, though still, as it were, in its infancy, is said to count today over 1,000,000 adherents, and the possibilities of its future success are infinite, for, in spite of internal schisms and external disabilities, there is no falling off either in the religious zeal, or in the number of fresh converts or in the religious fervor of believers.
