

HUME MILL CHRISTENED

WORK NOW UNDER WAY—FIRST PILE DRIVEN.

Judge Bowly Responds to Toast—Addresses by Messrs. Hume and Wright.

Monday, August 18th, 1902, is a day that will long be remembered in Astoria history, as the date of the christening of the first pile for George W. Hume's large sawmill. The day was an ideal one, and a crowd of several hundred loyal Astorians was present at the driving. Several carriages took Mr. Hume's invited guests to Tongue Point, leaving the Occident at 9:30 a. m. When the party reached the mill site they found that a large number had preceded them, and another crowd was following. Everything was in readiness for the drive, and at exactly 10:29 the first stroke was given, and the erection of the new Hume sawmill had begun.

After the pile had been driven into its final resting place a bottle of champagne was placed on the top of it, and another stroke of the driver christened the new enterprise as "The Tongue Point Lumber Company." At the same time a large banner, bearing the name George W. Hume, was unfurled at the top of the pile driver. Three hearty cheers and a tiger were given for the good friend of Astoria, Mr. Hume.

Hon. J. Q. A. Bowly gave a very appropriate address, which was followed by Manager Charles Wright, of the Occident. Mr. Wright said that Mr. Hume was the best kind of a man to help build up a city, because he never asked for a handout, but paid for everything he got; he brought money into a town and did not ask for a bounty to carry away to another city's coffers. And Mr. Wright spoke the truth. His remarks were loudly cheered.

Mr. Hume spoke briefly. He thanked his friends for their presence and kind words, and he assured them that whatever he undertook to do was done thoroughly. After he had closed, another three cheers and a tiger were given in his honor.

Several cases of champagne were opened and everybody was invited to partake. And all partook. Of course, all drank to the health of Mr. Hume, and to the success of the new mill. There was quite a scramble for the empty sam-sam bottles, which will be kept as souvenirs of the event.

Judge Bowly said in part: "Fellow citizens: It has been customary to gather about large enterprises and welcome its advent with some appropriate ceremony. The very fact of such a custom proves the benefit of new industries to the public as well as to the promoters."

"We have come together today to welcome such an enterprise. When the waters of the Inland Empire broke through the Cascade mountains and formed the Columbia river, the salmon ascended the stream and spread into its tributaries, to increase and maintain their kind. They did this far beyond the needs of primitive man, and according to the economy of nature, stored up a supply for the greater needs of a civilized people of a future time.

"Scarcely 40 years ago, the world began to receive and use what he had thus been prepared. An idea was conceived to catch and cook the salmon by the ton and send it abroad prepared and ready for the table.

"A small cannery was erected at Sacramento and soon after on the Columbia river. The business grew until now the revenue from the Columbia river pack alone is one and one-half million dollars. The canned salmon is known throughout the breadth of the civilized world. Canneries extend from the sunny Sacramento to the frozen waters of the Yukon river, and the coast pack has reached the enormous amount of four million cases, and a value of fifteen million dollars.

"About the same time with the opening of the Columbia river, the neighboring fertile mountain tops and hillsides sent up a growth which in the sunshine and mists developed into large forests, another great storehouse, which laid up material for the future. A radius of 30 miles would describe about us a district containing 30 billion feet, worth today in lumber 300 millions of dollars.

"The pioneer and founder of the salmon industry, ready to take up new enterprises which would contribute to the needs of the great industries of the present civilization, looked upon these forests and the efforts just beginning to be made to convert them into lumber. He saw the lumber industry to be but in its infancy. The time to be ripe. The markets of the world to be hungry. That there is a greater breadth of civilization than ever before, and the industries and commerce of the time demand greater quantities of lumber.

"He chose this spot for a mill, where, to use a familiar phrase, 'Sail and rail meet.' From here by land can be delivered the lumber to the cities of the continent, by rail and steam to the islands and ports of the sea. The enterprise this day started is not short lived, and its founder, when he shall sit in the glow of the setting sun of life, will rejoice with parental pride to see the work carried on by his son. Fortunate is the youth that enters the beginning of this new century, so equipped for industrial achievements."

"We citizens look upon this as the beginning of the great export trade that has been predicted for Astoria. Better is the export of home articles and manufactures than the exchange from boat to rail and vice versa of commodities grown or manufactured elsewhere. This mill is but the forerunner of others to follow and the beginning of a great conversion of timber and forests into lumber. The denuded lands will furnish opportunity for the erection of many homes and the development of the third natural industry of our locality, dairying. The effect of this enterprise today christened, 'The Tongue Point Lumbering Company,' will be to quicken and increase all business in this district, start new industries and fill the city and the surrounding country with a happy and prosperous people."

CORNER STONE IS LAID.

Archbishop Christie Delivers an Impressive Sermon.

Amid the impressive services of the Catholic church the corner stone of the new Catholic church was laid on Sunday afternoon at the corner of Fifteenth street and Grand avenue. Archbishop Christie, of Portland, officiated at the services, assisted by the resident pastor, Father Lane, and the Fathers Bely and Waters.

A document commemorative of the event, signed by the officiating clergy and the building committee and bearing the parish seal, was deposited in the stone with several coins and medals, publication of the document having been made previously by Father Lane. At the close of the ceremony eloquent addresses were delivered by Archbishop Christie and Fathers O'Reilly and Lane, who dwelt on the sacred significance of the ceremony, and expressed deep appreciation of the generous assistance given by the parish and the general public towards the great work so auspiciously begun. The building committee consists of Messrs. John Devlin, Edward O'Connor, William Cook and Henry Zapp.

Bishop Christie in his address impressed his congregation with the thought that in order to fill the pews of the new cathedral, each member must endeavor to so live that a good example might be given. Each to live a loyal and devoted life; observing the laws and doctrines of the Catholic church. It is the intention to build a school for boys, and as soon as the building of the church is completed the work will be undertaken and a building to do credit to Astoria will be erected.
