Continuing from previous meeting, Councilman Trullinger suggested that the improvement of Bond street would cost the taxpayers more than was necessary on account of using fourinch planks in repairing, and pointed out that only three-inch planks had been used in building the street, and as the stringers had been in for over 10 years it was no use spending money unnecessarily, as the whole road would have to be renewed in a couple of years. In spite of the plea the four-inch planks went.

At an early stage in the meeting, by permission of the mayor, Judge Nelson was kind enough to present the new representative of the Astorian and designate a convenient seat at the table for his use, a courtesy much appreciated.
