Stood on the Bridge.

The hour was not midnight, but early in the afternoon, and the occasion was one of joy and gladness. The turbid waters of Youngs river rushed merrily to the sea and the steel draw drew near to listen to the mystic words of Judge C. J. Trenchard as he pronounced Nat Jones and Annie Gadsby man and wife. The sturdy lord of the draw where the landsman bows to the mariner, and the blushing bride from the historic Lewis and Clark will live where they wedded, standing and other wise remaining upon the bridge.

Damage Suits Filed.

In the court of the justice of the peace yesterday forenoon a suit for damages was filed against the Wells-Fargo Express company by the Mo-Crea-Ford company. The damage included the destruction and loss of negatives shipped by plaintiff through defendant. The sum, in damages, sued for, is $250. In the afternoon a second suit was filed by Mary E. McCrea against the Northern Pacific Express company to recover three gold nuggets and a dimond ring, or their equivalent in the sum of $100. It is alleged that the jewelry was addressed to Princeten. Ind., and has not been received or heard of, though four months have clapsed. J. M. Hughes is attorney for the plaintiff i neach case filed.

Northern Pacific Withdraws.

The Northern Pacific Express com pany has closed its office in Astoria and turned its business over to the Wells, Fargo & Co office. Manager U. G. Hall and Route Agent Ward of the Northern Pacific and Route Agent W. B. Loubener of the Wells-Pargo were here yesterday to make the transfer. The Northern Pacific found the office here unprofitable on account of doing business by steamer in competition with the rail service of the rival com-This leaves only the Wells-Fargo and the Pacific express companies in the field, the former in charge of Judge Trenchard and the latter with R. G. Prael as agent.

Mr. Loubener will go to Tillamook on the next trip of the steamer Sue H Elmore to establish offices in Tillamook county, which will be served by that steamer.

Killed by the Train.

Fred Olsen, a young man who had recently located in Clifton from Portland, met a horrible death Sunday street. secured offices over Griffin's book store night by bing crushed and torn to largest bottle on the market, it will where she can be found from 10 to 12 pieces by the down train. As the train rounds a curve three-quarters of a mile this elde of Clifton Engineer Stoner was horrified by seeing a man lying on his back full length on the track. He was lying with his feet toward the engine just on the inside of the left rall. The strong headlight brought the form into plain view and though the engineer had time for but one brief glance, the awful impression made upon him made every detail of the figure plain to him. It was noticed that his hands were folded on his breast. The train was going at 20 miles an hour so it was impossible to prevent the catastrophe, though every effort was put forth to do so. Not until the engine and every car had cassed over the man could this be effected. Then only a mangled form remained and bits of human flesh were scattered about Two peculiar features about the affair were that the body did not leave the track nor was it touched by the wheels, the brakebeams and other works beneath the cars causing the death of the unfortunate man. As soon as the train could be stopped the crew hurrled to the rear and found the body torn and broken, lying between the rails. He was beyond all aid so the train con-tinued on to this city, the remains being left in charge of thet rack walker. Later some station-hands went up on a handcar and took them to Clifton and yesterday they were brought here. The body was identified as that of Fred Olsen, a young man about 25 years of age who had arrived in Clifton about two weeks ago from Portland. He had intended to pull boat for a Clifton fisherman during the approaching season. He left Clifton Sunday night somewhat under the influence of liquor, it is reported, and it was understood he intended going to Blind lough. It is the impression he had been overcome with stupor and had stretched out on the track to sleep. His being there can be accounted for in no other way, it being quite improbable that it was a case of suicide, though his strange position might indicate such. A brother of deceased holds a position on the govern ment steamer Albatross, but no other relatives are known of. The body is now in Coroner Pohl's undertaking par lors and today an inquest will be held.
