

WHEN TO BOW

Intercourse with regard to "when to bow" and "when not to bow" is painfully common. It may be considered of little moment whether a bow is given or withheld, or whether a shake of the hand is given in lieu of a bow, but in reality it carries a distinct significance whether the right or wrong thing is done on the spur of the moment. Also it is a two-sided question, and affects equally the one who receives a bow and the one who gives it, the one who is not bowed to and the one who does not bow.

It should be understood that a bow is a ceremonious recognition between those but slightly acquainted, and who do not know each other intimately enough to speak or to shake hands with when they meet. These conventional bows are quite outside of those constantly exchanged between friends who are unable at the moment to offer any other kind of greeting.

Out of doors is naturally the field for bowing, and where it comes most prominently forward. When for instance, two women meet who have not been recently introduced, if bows are not exchanged when passing each other, it would be next to impossible to do so on a subsequent occasion, and thus the acquaintance comes subsequently to an end. Again, it is equally required that bows should be exchanged between friends unable to speak to each other on the occasion of meeting, more especially between men and women themselves. If a woman does not bow to a man she knows when he looks expectantly at her, he considers himself cut by her, although she has no such intention, and was really postponing her greeting until—say, she had shaken hands with her host and hostess. This phase of bowing often repeats itself, and goes to prove that the right thing should be done at the right moment—a bow given when due.

The same equally holds good between men and women as between women. An introduction at a ball or a dinner, indeed, if made at any function or at any time, almost obliges a woman to recognize the acquaintance by a bow at any future meeting. If she does not take advantage of her privilege to acknowledge it in this manner, it is taken to mean that she does not desire to continue it, and, once relinquished, it cannot be readily resumed. Oftener than not this is not the reason why a woman does not bow to a ball room acquaintance; the actual one is, in most instances, in doubt whether she is expected to bow to him. Thus the bow should be forthcoming without hesitation.

A merely bowing acquaintance is somewhat monotonous when people meet frequently each day out of doors, more particularly at seaside places. To bow at each meeting would be out of the question, and the received social law is to bow once only. A smile does duty on the second occasion, and during the remainder of the day no further notice is vouchsafed or expected.

Under ordinary circumstances a bow is the received way of acknowledging an introduction. At after meetings within doors the bow is often a prelude to a slight conversation, and also concludes it when the two separate. Again when long and pleasant conversation follows upon an introduction, although a bow acknowledges the same, yet in this case shaking hands takes the place of bowing on departure, but this is exceptional, and a bow is the usual mode of taking leave between two newly-met acquaintances.

When slight acquaintances meet at homes, dinner parties, etc., to bow is all that is necessary, but the bow should be made as soon as may be. If a woman is seated and another arrives, as soon as the one attacks the notice of the other bows should be exchanged.

There are incidental occasions when bows are given. At breakfast in a country house bows are the morning salutation. At dinner parties, when guests are seated far apart they can, if inclined to do so, bow and smile at one another. Out driving is a frequent opportunity for bowing.

THE GREAT WOW WOW

Hark! List to the tread!
There's an army of men
Just from the forests
Where the workers have been.
The aim of these "choppers"
Is good to enlow.
Ho! They're floating a banner;
'Tis the great Wow Wow.

There's the cream of the order
Head Banker Cooper,
"Billy" Reid of Webfoot
Woodcraft's great whopper
There's an unbroken column
That's taken the vow
And they march in the phalanx
Of the great Wow Wow

Like the hosts of the Caesars
They're teeming today:
All up with their axes
And courting the fray.
But Colonel is with us
To settle the row,
So we welcome with pleasure
The noted Wow Wow

They are with us today
From Willamette's plains
From the wooded expanse
Of the coast mountain chains,
They've come from the workshops,
The forests and plow,
We welcome you craftsmen
Of the great Wow Wow.

SALESMEN APPROPRIATE GOODS

Chicago, August 18.—William Kaufman and Harry Kaufman, his nephew, were arrested last night charged with embezzling $2000 and with taking goods valued at $1,700, from Isaac Leopold, a wholesale merchant at Houston, Texas. Leopold, it is said, engaged the men to travel as salesmen, giving them a consignment of goods and money for expenses. The Kaufmans, it is alleged sold part of the goods, then slipped the remainder to Chicago where they disposed of them to second hand dealers, using the proceeds to buy a saloon.
