

STORM KING PREVENTED

Spoiled Marriage at Sea That Was Planned by Lane County Sweethearts.

MEANT TO GO OUT ON BAR TUG

Prospect of Seasickness Deterred Them and County Judge Trenchard Tied the Knot Ashore.

"A wedding at sea!"
Cried the bride-to-be,
"On the billows tossing about!"
"Oh, not with me!"
Said the groom-to-be,
"For they'd marry us inside out!"
—Ditty of the Lovers.

The storm king has played havoc with the romantic inclinations of pretty Miss Ivah B. Smith, of Hale, Ore. When B. D. McLean exacted from her a promise to become his wife the young lady discerned an opportunity to realize a fond dream. She had contemplated the bliss of marriage at sea, and the ardent wooer consented to her proposal that they be wedded on the ocean. Hale is a little town some 15 or 20 miles west of Eugene. If for no other reason, it is entitled to distinction for having produced two decidedly pretty girls—Miss Smith and her sister, Miss Myrtle. Mr. McLean, the other principal, resides at Eugene.

Wednesday night the three arrived in Astoria, the lovers bent upon being married at sea. The party came down the river on the Potter, to the captain of which McLean confided his intention. The captain suggested to him that he talk with the captain of one of the bar tugs, and McLean followed his advice. The three put up at the Parker house, where the night clerk was taken into the plot. The lovers found him a sympathetic friend, anxious to do everything in his power to assist them in their little romance. It first occurred to the clerk that Captain Bryne, of the Manzanita, would gladly take the couple to the sea, but the Manzanita had started for the lightship early Thursday morning, so this idea was abandoned. Then the clerk determined to consult Captain Bailey, of the bar tug Tatoosh. The Tatoosh is licensed to carry passengers and if the captain was willing all would be well. Thursday morning the groom-to-be and the hotel clerk hunted up Captain Bailey.

"My ship's tied up for today," said Bailey, "but if you'll come around tomorrow, I'll take you out and perform the ceremony."

So the anxious young man went back to the hotel and told his sweetheart that he had everything in shape. Meantime Captain Bailey hunted up a Bible, posted himself as to formality and then proceeded to take treatment for nervousness. He was unmistakably rattled when he confided to a reporter that he was to marry the couple, and the reporter was too tactful to tell him he did not believe him when Bailey related a story to the effect that he had married many couples.

Now, this thing of being married at sea is all very nice if the weather is fine. If, however, the storm king is roving, and the waves are rolling mountain high, romance is quite apt to be eliminated from the proceedings. Under such conditions the tendency of one's organism is decidedly upward. Those who have enjoyed the bliss of seasickness will readily understand that it is not calculated to add to the sentiment of even the most devoted lover. So, when Thursday night came and the barometer continued to frown its meteorological warning, it was determined that the sea trip should be abandoned. The prospects of seasickness, with its don't-care feeling, was not at all pleasing, so it was decided that the wedding should take place on dry land. Accordingly County Judge Trenchard was called in, after the necessary marriage license had been secured, and at the parlors of the Parker house the judge tied the nuptial knot. When Captain Bailey heard of it he heaved a sigh of relief and his nervousness left him. Mr. McLean exacted from the judge and the hotel clerk a solemn promise to not divulge the story until bride and groom were out of the city, and the promise was kept. Yesterday morning the newly married couple took the train for Seaside, where they spent the day with P. F. McCann, an old friend of the groom. Last night they passed through the city en route home. Mr. McLean has lived at Eugene for about a year and a half. He formerly resided in the east.
