A DESERTED CITY FOUND

Explorers in South America Discover Ruins Unoccupied for 2000 Years.

SKELETONS OF TALL MEN

Long Lost City in the Andes Is Supposed to Have Been Abode of Aztecs-Stone Tools but no Writings Found.

The discovery of a city in the Andes mountains in Argentine which has een deserted for possibily 2,000 years but which was once inhabited presumably by Aztecs of much larger statue than those who lived in Central America and Mexico, is reported by two men who reached this city yesterday from the South American republic says the Seattle P. L. They the scientific knowledge of the dead and gone races of South America, and are now hurrying to the east, there to present the results of their researches before the American and German that is all it does take. scientists of note.

The discoverers of the ancient city are Prof. Emil von Burgess, of Berlin. Germany, a famous archaeologist of that country, and William J. Heminway, a New York man, who has for years been an explorer in South America. The two men, at the head of a party of five, have spent a year in the south on a special exploration expedition. They reached Seattle yesterday from San Francisco, where they arrived a few days ago on a South American steamer, and leave early this morning for the east. They spent last night at the Hotel Cecil.

The history of the finding of the old, deserted city would fill a book. Situated in the Andes about 250 miles from Arauco, Chile, in a little valley reached only after weeks of effort and hardship, the intrepid travelers found the city, forgotten for centuries, in an almost perfect state of preservation, Stone houses, erected probably before the coming of Christ on earth, crumbling and grown over with tres, mosses and shrubs, but nevertheless standing as no building ever constructed in modern times will stand, bear mute testimony to the existence of a race in the Andes that other travelers and explorers have heretofore tirely to discover.

Ancient tools of husbandry, household implements of stone, hermetically sealed graves which when opened disclosed the skeletons of men of large stature, that crumbled to dust when exposed to the air, give evidence of a higher state of civilization almost than that of Asia 2,000 years ago, were found by the travelers and their companions. From the old city have been brought to the United States a large quantity of ancient articles, and these, some day, will probably help to fill some museum in this country and in Germany, according to the explorers. The articles brought back are considered invaluable by their discoverers, and the researches of Prof. von Burgess will augment the world's knowledge of the Aztees, or that portion of the race inhabiting South America.

From all the explorers could ascertain, the city once held some 1,500 souls. Their principal occupation was doubtless that of agriculture and skeletons found the men of the tribe were six feet and over in height, while the women were also of unusual stature. Prof. von Burgess considers that either a flood or some kind of disease exterminated the race. It was probably the latter, according to him. as the little city in the valley of the mountains bears no witness of ever having been inundated.

Saw Port Arthur. San Francisco, Oct. 25.-Lieutenant Fortescue, Tenth United States cavalry, a nephew of President Roosevell, returned from the Orient today on the steamer Doric. He has been the American military attachee with the Japanese army in front of Port Arthur. He returns now on account of the expiration of his leave of absence and is taking his report to the secretary of war. Lieutenant Fortescue said the Japanese officers showed him every courtesy and furnished him with complete maps of the Port Arthur peninsula. While in Japan Lleutenant Fortescue was offered the decoration of the rising sun by the mikado, but was not authorized to receive it.

IF I WERE A BOY.

What Bishop Vincent Thinks can Boys Should

If I were a boy with a man's wis dom I should eat wholesome food and never once go to bed without cleanby without a dentist's inspection and treatment: never sit up late at night unless a great emergency demanded it; never linger one moment in bed when the time came for getting up; never fall to rub every part of my body every morning with a wet towel, and then with a dry one, and never drink more than three or four tablespoonfu's of ice-water at one time. But all this takes will power. Yes, but

I should never speak a word to anyone who might be worried about it. and only kind words of others, even of enemies, in their absence, should put no unclean thoughts, pictures, sights, or stories in my memory and imiganation. I should want to be able to say, like Dr. George H. Whitney: "I have never pronounced a word which I ought not to speak in
